WHO WHAT . . .??

The level of debate in the B.C. legislature is not always renowned for its intellectuality.

But now it seems Hansard, official recorder of house proceedings, has come to expect the worst.

In debate this week, a question was asked: "Who drafted the Coal Act?"

$300,000 BLAZE IN SURREY SCHOOL

SURREY (CP) — Arson is suspected in a fire which burned out the interior of the Erma Stephenson elementary school in Surrey Friday and caused an estimated $300,000 to $350,000 damage.

One classroom and the library was saved in the fire which started in the southeast corner of the school in a classroom.

Jock Smith, Surrey school board chairman, said Friday a window was broken in the school and a car and a truck were also set fire near the school.

He said: "We have been having a lot of trouble with vandalism in the area. As a matter of fact, it is because of a delegation of parents complaining about the vandalism in the school that we set up a special monitoring system that was mainly responsible for saving at least part of the school."

The main building fo the Tsartlip Indian school near Brentwood was destroyed by fire early today.

The alarm was turned in at 2 a.m. and no one was injured in the five hours firemen fought the blaze. Loss is estimated to be at least $150,000.

A spokesman for the Central Saanich volunteer fire department declined comment on the possibility of arson but said the fire marshal's office has been called in to investigate the cause.

The 26-year-old school, operated by the federal Indian affairs department, had three classrooms with about 70 pupils from grades 2 to 6, administrator Marie Cooper said today. For them the school year has ended about a week early.

Three other school buildings on the site are undamaged. One of them housed the Little Raven Nursery school, a second was used for a Grade 1 class and the third for Grade 7 pupils.

A fire department deputy said the fire broke out in the north end of the main building, in the vicinity of a nurse's office and storage room.

About 20 men with four fire trucks turned out to battle the fire, with four or five men and one truck from the Sidney fire department being called in to assist.

"We will be negotiating with the federal government for the rebuilding of the school," Ms. Cooper said.

Saanich firemen were called to a barn fire at 1555 West Burnside shortly after midnight but the building was completely in flames when they arrived and burned to the ground.

A department spokesman said today the barn was empty and residents on the property had moved out earlier in the day. Cause of the fire is under investigation by police.

Navy Man, Youth Die in Crashes

A 21-year-old Esquimalt navy man was killed and his passenger injured early today in a single-car crash at the Swartz Bay ferry terminal.

Dead is Michael Brant Maxwell of Coleman, Alta. The passenger, Gregory Kenneth Dean, 22, is in fair condition at Royal Jubilee Hospital. Both were crewmen aboard HMCS Yukon at Canadian Forces Base, Esquimalt.

Sidney RCMP said their car sideswiped a lamp standard, spun around before "wrapping right around" a second lamp standard. The accident took place about 2 a.m.

An 18-year-old youth from the B.C. interior was killed Friday evening after being pinned in an overturned car on Telegraph Road near Cobble Hill.

Shawnigan Lake RCMP said the victim was a passenger in a car driven by a 16-year-old boy which went out of control and flipped.

A two-car collision on Esquimalt Road at Catherine Street shortly before 3 a.m. sent two men to hospital for treatment.

City police said William MacPhee, 2649 Heron St., was turning at the intersection when his car was in collision with an auto driven by Richard Forsyth of Murns Road.

Forsyth and a passenger, John Kluss of 108 Trans-Canada Highway, were released after treatment for head injuries.

JUDGE BANS CONTROLLERS' STRIKE

Wildcat Air Walkout?

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The federal court granted the government a 10-day injunction today aimed at blocking a national strike by the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, but there were indications that there will be a walkout anyway.

Shortly after the court decision, Jim Livingston, president of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, said 82 per cent of the members had voted to walk off the job to protest the expansion of French-language use in Quebec airports.

Livingston told reporters he hoped members would obey the injunction, but said he had indications from some parts of the country that controllers would walk out.

The controllers voted 1,306 to 280 to authorize a strike. Only 93 of about 320 Quebec controllers voted, 35 of them in favor of a strike.

Jean-Luc Patenaude, Quebec director of the union, has said his members will stay on the job.

In Calgary, Doug Dickson, chairman of the association's local branch, said there could be no guarantee that southern Alberta controllers will stay on the job Sunday. The men were "extremely dissatisfied and emotionally overwrought" over the issuance of the injunction.

And in Vancouver, John Marshall, Pacific Region air traffic control director, said today that there could be a walkout despite the injunction.

"However, I'm not about to advocate that my members disobey the law," he said.

"But I do feel that there are going to be some very, very upset controllers. How the individual acts I'm not about to predict."

Al Cowan, chairman of the Vancouver branch said controllers in Vancouver do not plan a wildcat strike.

In Montreal, CALPA president Ken Malley said airline pilots may stay off the job Sunday should "a breakdown" in air traffic control occur.

Mr. Justice George Addy, when announcing the ruling, said the threatened strike would cause "grave and irreparable harm" to the public, business and Canada's international reputation.

He called the controllers' stated concern over public safety in the language issue "an artificial motive."

The question of public safety is not the responsibility of the union but the government, the judge told the court.

Airline spokesmen in Vancouver said domestic flights in and out of Vancouver will be cancelled and most international flights will be rerouted through Seattle if air traf-

'Nine Near Misses'

EDMONTON (CP) — The western regional director of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association says there have been nine near misses involving aircraft in Canada in the last 30 days because the battle over bilingualism has preoccupied air traffic controllers.

Bob Crossley said in an interview Friday night:

"We're the last people in the world who want to criticize these people (the controllers) because they're the best in the world.

"Our life depends on these people. They're professionals.

"But there is some outside pressure breaking down our system and we don't have to go far to figure out what it is."

Mr. Crossley said that because of the language issue, the controllers "don't have their mind on their work."

Speaking before the federal court granted an injunction today aimed at blocking the threatened strike by the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, Mr. Crossley said pilots might refuse to fly even if the controllers remained on the job.

"The air is not a safe place to be right now," he said. "Not any of us are much interested in being told by a federal judge or provincial judge or any kind of judge: 'You can take off and go kill yourself'."

Mr. Crossley, who said earlier in the week that CP Air and Air Canada passenger planes narrowly averted a collision over North Bay, Ont., June 10, said:

"There has been a great rash of near-misses and we know the ministry of transport is seriously concerned."

A CP Air spokesman in Vancouver said the North Bay incident was "apparently a result of an error by air traffic controllers."

In a telephone interview from Ottawa, a transport department spokesman said the near-miss over North Bay was being investigated, but declined to say what may have caused the incident.

TO STAY HEALTHY . . . STAY SINGLE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Married people usually are healthier than the formerly married, but healthiest of all are those who never wed, according to the U.S. government's first statistical study on the relationship of marriage to illness.

"These over-all measures of health status indicate that married persons had fewer health problems than formerly married persons," said the National Centre for Health Statistics.

Healthiest of all are persons who never married, usually younger than those in the other two groups. But married persons were least likely to be institutionalized for care in nursing homes or mental hospitals, the report said.

Formerly married persons — widowed, separated, divorced — were most likely to be admitted to places providing care for the mentally ill, it said, and the never-married were most likely to wind up in nursing homes in their old age.

Pickets Obey Court Order

VANCOUVER (CP) — Eight pickets from Arvida, Que., who had picketed the Aluminum Company of Canada smelter plant at Kitimat since last Saturday, today removed the picket line.

The move followed the serving of a cease and desist order issued by the B.C. Labor Relations Board, with the backing of the B.C. Supreme Court.

The order was served today after the pickets refused to accept it Friday night from Alcan security staff.

Following the decision Friday about 300 union members threw up log barricades to the Alcan property.

RCMP were twice called to the scene and asked the pickets to remove the barricades which was eventually done. Police then escorted Alcan foremen into the plant.

The Quebec workers set up their picket line just hours after RCMP ended picketing by Kitimat workers a week ago, arrested and charging 32 persons. The Kitimat workers are members of the Canadian Association of Smelter and Allied Workers.

Union spokesmen said the membership would meet Sunday to determine a future course of action.

The Quebec workers are members of the Federation des Syndicats du Secteur de l'Aluminum of Quebec. The board issued its order Friday that picketing by the Quebec workers was illegal and should be stopped immediately.

In Vancouver, union local president Peter Burton said at a labor protest against wage controls that the workers may vote Sunday to end the walkout because "there is a certain sense of demoralization."

The Kitimat workers went on strike to obtain a higher wage settlement than provided by their current contract. They got 8.9 per cent this year and 6.5 for the second year, which is in line with federal anti-inflation board guidelines.

LEAVE $ TAP OPEN–DRAPEAU

MONTREAL (CP) — Mayor Jean Drapeau reiterated Friday that Montreal's Olympic Games, currently estimated to cost $1.4 billion, will be self-financing.

"If we leave the taps open until the bathtub is full," the mayor said, the money raised by self-financing plans "will help Olympians for years to come." Drapeau was speaking at a ceremony to unveil three new Olympic fund raising stamps.

Also speaking at the ceremony, Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey praised "Mr. Drapeau's dream" and said the Olympics will not cost Canadians anything if they are evaluated the right way.

Fighting Delays Convoy

BEIRUT (UPI) — Heavy fighting along the roads surrounding Beirut today forced a 24-hour postponement of a convoy taking hundreds of Americans and Britons out of Lebanon.

A British spokesman urged everyone to be ready Sunday for what he said might be the last chance to get out of the city.

Announcement of the postponement, coming only minutes before the convoy's scheduled departure, brought groans of disbelief and frustration from crowds of Americans assembled at the Riviera Hotel and from Britons and other nationals at the British embassy waiting for the long ride to Damascus.

A leftist military communique said Syrian and pro-Syrian troops holding a section of the evacuation route near Beirut Airport began shelling leftist positions and Palestinian refugee camps about the time the convoy was scheduled to leave.

The shelling escalated into a battle with mortars, artillery and machinegun fire, making the road a possible death-trap.

Meanwhile, a U.S. Navy task force with 1,800 marines aboard was standing by several hundred miles off the coast of Lebanon. The attack-carrier America, loaded with more than 90 jets, was ordered to within about 150 miles of Lebanon.

Blacks Attack Looters as Riots Cool

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Black mobs today attacked black looters and other criminals they believe were responsible for the destruction and violence of recent days, but otherwise an uneasy calm replaced the worst racial conflict in white-ruled South Africa's history, police said.

Two looters trapped inside a shop in Tembisa, outside Johannesburg, were reported beaten to death by other blacks and a third man was injured and taken to hospital.

In Tokoza township, blacks incensed at finding a beer hall burned down stoned a crowd of young gangsters they held responsible.

There have been reports that black criminals took advantage of the riots to burn and loot shops and beer halls. Observers said the attacks against black criminals might be the beginning of a black backlash against the widespread destruction of the neighborhoods.

Heavily-armed black and white policemen continued to patrol the tense, riot-scarred black townships ringing Johannesburg, watching for fresh outbreaks of the violence that has taken more than 100 lives and left at least 1,000 injured since Wednesday.

The worst-hit townships were scenes of desolation. Burned-out buses and other vehicles littered streets lined with the charred remains of offices, stores and other buildings set ablaze by mobs of angry blacks.

Rioting ebbed after several thousand police, armed with automatic weapons and orders to use every available means to crush the black uprising, moved into troubled areas late Friday.

Despite the return to relative calm, police said the situation was still tense in Soweto and Alexandra, the two townships where rioting was most intense. Sporadic incidents of stoning and arson were reported in both black settlements overnight.

Prime Minister John Vorster told the South African Parliament Friday: "We will not be intimidated and will fic controllers walk off the job.

Air Canada, CP Air and Pacific Western Airlines, the three major Canadian airlines using Vancouver international airport, said all domestic flights will be cancelled if a strike takes place.

Jim McKeachie, CP Air spokesman, said Friday that CP Air would operate normally today, except for two transcontinental flights which usually leave here at 10:15 p.m. and midnight. He said a strike would cancel those flights.

Air Canada notified its unions today that their members will be placed off duty without pay 48 hours after any strike by the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association.

The spokesman said the off-duty notice would affect about 10,000 employees across the country. The airline plans to shut down its entire scheduled operation in the event of a strike.

"The only operations that we would contemplate would be rescue operations and those involving return charters," he said.

language, the language of the white governing Boer faction.

Many blacks view Afrikaans as a symbol of white oppression and many students prefer English because it is a more practical, universal language.

The uprising grew into a violent protest against the government's racial policies.

The rioting spread Thursday and Friday to other black townships and black universities as blacks burned buildings and cars and stoned passing whites and policemen. The townships are enclaves for black South Africans, who are forbidden to live in white-only areas.

After confirming Friday morning that 58 were dead and 788 wounded, the government stopped issuing casualty figures. Unofficial compilations arrived at the higher figures. The police said only two of the 58 dead were white.

The widespread riots were the most serious racial upheaval in recent times in this country of 18 million blacks and four million whites.

Vorster said the rioting was a determined effort to cause panic and divide the country into opposing black and white factions. He did not say who he thought was responsible for the uprisings, but two leading South African churchmen who are critics of apartheid were served court orders Friday warning them against interfering in the unrest.

Gains for Coloreds Rejected

CAPE TOWN (AP) — A special government-appointed commission recommended fundamental social and political changes Friday in South Africa's policy toward the country's 2.4 million people of mixed race, those officially called "coloreds."

The government's first reaction was a flat 'no' to the proposals, which include direct representation for coloreds in the present all-white parliament and provincial and local institutions; repeal of a law prohibiting mixed marriages and the section of the Immorality Act which bans sex between whites and non-whites.

The commission's report was submitted for parliament consideration as racial disorders spread in South Africa after two days of rioting by blacks in the Johannesburg suburb of Soweto.

Debate is expected to begin in parliament next week on the 600-page document and its 178 resolutions. The report is the result of more than three years of work by an 18-member multi-racial commission set up by the government and headed by Erika Theron, a 69-year-old professor at Stellenbosch University.

In a preliminary White Paper submitted to parliament with the commission's recommendations, the government of Prime Minister John Vorster said: "Any recommendation to the effect that direct representation be granted to coloreds in the existing parliamentary, provincial and local institutions is not acceptable to the government."

GNP Rising, But . . .

OTTAWA (CP) — The economy continued to recover in the early mnths of 1976, but Statistics Canada Friday expressed concern that the recovery was not accompanied by traditionally stronger demand for goods and services.

The gross national product (GNP) grew at an annual rate of 2.7 per cent during the first quarter because of massive stockpiling of goods at a rate that cannot be sustained very long, the government agency warned.

At the same time, Canada's deficit on trade with foreign countries continued to grow and capital investment in new production machinery and equipment fell.

New home-building, which had been growing rapidly early this year, now appears to have peaked out and will not recover to earlier levels, Statistics Canada predicts.

GNP measures the value of all goods and services produced in the economy. Including the combined increase in prices and output during the first three months of 1976, it rose at an annual rate of 4.4 per cent to $176.5 billion.

Finance Minister Donald Macdonald has predicted GNP will rise at a real rate — after discounting for inflation — of about five per cent in 1976. There was almost no growth in GNP in 1975.

Statistics Canada says inflation moderated during the first quarter this year to an annual rate of 6.8 per cent from 9.6 per cent in the final three months of 1976.

The economic recovery gained momentum in the early months this year, and real GNP now is more than five per cent higher than it was a year ago when the economy was in the depths of recession. The first quarter this year was the fourth successive one in which the volume of production has risen.

But Statistics Canada says the heavy stockpiling of goods early this year is a cause for concern — "first, because inventory accumulation is almost certainly not sustainable at anything like the first-quarter rate, and second, because there are some grounds for believing that some of it may have been unintended."

Retailers and wholesalers, who had sold heavily from built-up stocks late in 1975, once more built them up in the first quarter of this year. The resulting $4.4 billion swing in inventories is the largest it ever has recorded, Statistics Canada said.

Stock-building is not a reliable source of long-run growth and the size of the build-up in the first three months this year suggests it will be short-lived.

Where's Money Going

A sudden jump in coffee prices this week is blamed by importer John Murchie, of Vancouver, on an international price-fixing policy of have-not nations which produce the world's supply of coffee beans.

Murchie said Western coffee importers try to ignore these artificial and arbitrary price jumps, but the largest dealer — General Foods — said this week it was raising wholesale prices by 30 cents a pound. Others would likely follow.

There is no shortage of coffee beans, Murchie contends.

"Their supplies are higher than they were last year," he said referring to Colombia and Brazil, which are among the highest producers.

"I'm curious to know where the money is going," he said, noting producing countries are often foregin aid recipients.

The most recent increases had put the price of green coffee at $2 a pound, point of entry to buyers, giving producers a 200 per cent profit, according to Murchie.

Coffee growing countries were engaged in an "international holdup," he declared.

GAUTHIER GOT PERMISSION: MP

By IAIN HUNTER
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — The chairman of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal has said that the government gave him permission to carry on his private business activities when it extended his term, according to Tory MP Sinclair Stevens.

However, Prime Minister Trudeau would not confirm or deny the claim allegedly made by Patrick Gauthier. The opposition has produced documents to show that Gauthier, since his appointment as tribunal chairman in 1972, has been carrying on dealings with international financiers and businessmen.

The statement that Gauthier has said he had the approval of the government to carry on his business activities when his term was extended in January of this year for another six months, was made in the House by Stevens.

Outside the House, Stevens said he was not told this by the chairman himself.

The prime minister reminded the Tory MP in the Commons that Gauthier stayed on "at our request.

"He had for some time wanted to resign at the end of December, and it was to accommodate the government and to help us in this transitional period for six months that he agreed to stay on," Trudeau said.

He said he was not aware of "what exactly transpired of a contractual form or in conversation" between Gauthier and Finance Minister Donald Madconald before the extension of the chairman's term was approved.

Macdonald was out of town and his predecessor, who appointed Gauthier chairman of the tribunal originally in 1972, could not be reached immediately for comment.

The prime minister also refused to accept what he called the "assumption" of the Opposition — that the chairman has been carrying on private business activities while chairing the tribunal.

Tory MP Elmer MacKay (Central Nova) has produced documents to show that four days after his appointment as chairman, Gauthier was discussing business ventures with foreign businessmen and financiers. The fields of activity mentioned in the documents related to the marketing of gun sights, housing, fish roe and a number of inventions.

the weather

A disturbance which brought cloudy skies and some precipitation to many coastal areas mainly on the north coast as well as over the central Interior Friday is continuing to push to the southeast and is expected to reach southeastern B.C. today. Most areas will receive only small amounts of precipitation although locally in the interior some places will receive larger amounts due to thundershower activity mainly over the Kootenay area this afternoon. Following this system sunny periods are forecast over most areas of the province with more sunshine forecast for Sunday although there will be some shower activity devloping in the afternoon over the B.C. Interior on Sunday.

Company Data Registry Urged

OTTAWA (CP) — A central, federal registry of information that would compile all operational data disclosed by corporations is suggested in a reseach report prepared for the royal commission on corporate concentration.

The report, written by Toronto lawyer John Kazanjian, said a central registry would relieve many of the administrative shortcoomings of the current system resulting from the differing requirements of Ottawa and the 10 provincial governments.

The current system is "fragmented and uneven in its application . . . and would confound the administrators of Byzantium."

A central registry would solicit all information required from corporations, including that destined for public release as well as internal information used by governments. This would eliminate the need for duplicate requests by government agencies for the same data, as well as "any inter-jurisdictional loopholes or gaps."

However, there would be constitutional barriers to the federal registry and the report suggests alternatively that a similar comprehensive approach be used within the individual governments along with co-ordinating policies between governments.

The royal commission, said it released the internal research report because of widespread interest in corporate disclosure. The commission — which is to report to the government later this year on the nature and implications of concentrated corporate power — noted it has not yet reached any conclusion on the disclosure issue.

Kazanjian says disclosure of information is capable of making corporations more accountable because the disclosure is "a decentralizer, a deconcentrator" of corporate power. But the use of legislation in forcing such disclosure is extremely complicated.

He concludes that usefulness of information as a controller of corporate power must be "measured against the availability of superior alternative legislative devices for effecting the same end."

The usefulness of disclosure depends on factors such as the nature of the information, the context in which it is used and the segment of the public whose interests it is intended to serve — and this must in turn be "weighed in the light of legitimate corporate interests for restricting disclosure."

In terms of corporations themselves, the report says disclosure could be useful in highly competitive sectors by opening companies up to more effective competition.

But most Canadian industries are controlled by three or four major firms with an emphasis on stability rather competition. "To provide such firms with additional information about each other might further erode whatever competitive incentive that remained."

King Carl XVI Gustaf leads smiling Queen Silvia from the altar

TRADITIONAL WEDDING FOR KING OF SWEDEN

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — Sweden's King Carl XVI Gustaf and West German commoner Silvia Sommerlath were married today in royal splendor at Stockholm's great church.

After the ceremony, Miss Sommerlath, 32, who received her Swedish citizenship only Friday, automatically became Queen Silvia — Queen of Sweden.

In accordance with German tradition, it was a single ring ceremony and one ring carried on a velvet cushion was slipped on Silvia's finger by Carl Gustaf.

The 13th Century church in Stockholm's old quarter was decked with spring flowers. including a new strain of red roses, named "Queen Silvia".

More than 1,200 guests, including royalty and statesmen from most European countries, attended the noon wedding — the first by a reigning Swedish monarch since 1797.

Thousands of curious well-wishers lined the cortege route to catch a glimpse of 30-year-old king and his queen.

Silvia wore a white satin Christian Dior gown in the "traditional style" and an old family veil, topped by a tiara belonging to the late Princess Sibylla, the king's mother. She carried a bouquet of jasmine and orchids.

The king chose his admiral's uniform with one decoration around his neck—the Swedish Military Order of the Sword. He also wore two Grand Stars, the Swedish Order of the Seraphim and in honor of his bride, the Grand Star of the Order of Merit of the German Federal Republic.

After the wedding ceremony, the royal couple rode an open carriage drawn by four horses through the streets of Stockholm and then returned to the royal palace.

Provinces Trip Up Family Law Reform

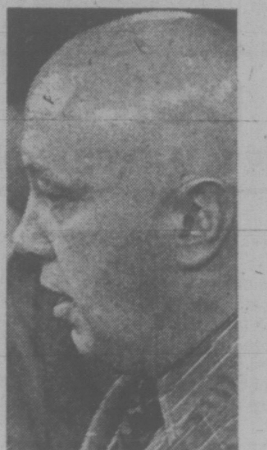
VANCOUVER CP) — Jurisdictional conflict marked initial federal-provincial discussion of new family law Friday and made apparent the fact that "no-fault" divorce is some time away in Canada.

"This is an area of very, very complex federal-provincial relations and constitutional arrangements," Justice Minister Ron Basford said in an interview after discussing the subject with his provincial counterparts at a conference here.

He would give no predictions as to when a "no-fault" divorce bill, in which marriage breakdown would become the sole grounds for divorce, would be presented to Parliament.

Meanwhile the provinces appeared bent on preserving their jurisdiction in family law matters other than divorce. Their attorneys-general said a unified family court is desirable but should be established within the provincial court system.

Currently divorces are handled by federally-appointed judges while other family law is dealt with in provincial courts at several levels. The Law Reform Commission of Canada has proposed that all significant family law jurisdiction be vested in one court. It would handle divorce, child custody, property matters, and maintenance during marriage.



BASFORD
. . . complex issue

The commission said that a judge exercising this kind of jurisdiction must, under the constitution, be appointed by the federal government. Its proposal to this effect ran into opposition from some of the attorneys-general, although most agree a unified family court is desirable.

Attorney-General Roy McMurtry of Ontario said he believes the dispute can be solved by "application of a little common sense." He added that the province would not allow its jurisdiction to be undermined.

British Columbia Attorney-General Garde Gardom said he belives the issue can be settled without a constitutional amendment to establish the new court. He and the other attorneys-general visited a pilot family court project in Richmond, a Vancouver suburb, in which a federal and a provincial judge shit in tandem to deal with cases in a comprehensive way.

Meanwhile, Basford and Attorney-General Howard Pawley of Manitoba announced creation of a pilot family court in St. Boniface along the lines proposed by the Law Reform Commission. They described it as a "significant step forward" and one that would be useful in developing family courts elsewhere in Canada.

Quebec Solicitor-General Fernand Lalonde said provincial courts in his province handle 25,000 family cases a year while federal courts handle 12,000.

Lalonde said a constitutional amendment might be required to establish a family court with the powers described by the Law Reform Commission.

HOCKEY CURBS URGED

VANCOUVER (UPI) — Canada's top legal strategists Friday urged tougher rules to stop violence in hockey so that police do not have to step in and charge offenders.

A two-day conference of federal and provincial attorneys-general called on the governing bodies of all levels of hockey to develop and enforce rules providing for the "automatic removal" of players who indulge in violence.

Later Ontario Attorney-General Roy McMurtry — who has taken a leading role against violence in pro hockey — said he did not expect the call to result in any changes in National Hockey League rules apart from changes already announced.

"But we hope it will encourage the NHL to enforce their rules a little more enthusiastically than they have in the past," he said.

"We hope amateur leagues will be similarly disposed to regulate themselves to eliminate a lot of the excessive violence. brutality and bullying that goes on and discourages a lot of young people from participating because of the extent to which 'goon hockey' has been institutionalized.

"Hopefully now there is a trend in the opposite direction but we will have to wait and see next season."

'JAWS' MOVES AGAIN

HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (UPI — The mechanical shark that terrified theatregoers in the movie "Jaws" and now leaps from a lagoon and snaps at tourists visiting Universal Studios sent a workman to the hospital Friday.

Barry Alkira, 30, a painter at the studio, was working on the fin of the life-like shark when the mock sea creature was "inadvertently activated," a Universal spokesman said.

Alkira was apparently thrown through the air and dragged by the "shark." He was taken by ambulance to St. Joseph's Medical Center in Burbank with possible back injuries.

Hospitals 'Needlessly' Occupied

OTTAWA (CP) — A national convention of hospital administrators was told Friday that up to 60 per cent of all hospital beds in Canada are being unnecessarily occupied by persons who could be at home if a few of their basic needs were met.

Dr. C. W. Birkett, a health care consultant, told about 100 members of the Canadian Hospital Association that 50 to 60 per cent of patients in Canadian hospitals could safely be dismissed if family members knew how to take care of them.

Many elderly patients should be at home or in nursing homes, he said, but the younger generation does not seem to want to take care of them.

He said he was very concerned that the "baby boom generation, who were followed by the contraceptive generation, will have no one to foot the bill for their health costs."

Biggest Jump In Coast Prices

OTTAWA (CP) — Vancouver residents were hit by the largest price increases in Canada over the past year, Statistics Canada reported Friday.

The consumer price index for May was up 11.6 per cent from May, 1975. The smallest 12 month rises were in Montreal and Quebec City, where prices were up eight per cent.

Victoria is not one of the centres selected for price index monitoring, but is considered to reflect Vancouver's figures.

The highest one month increase was in Winnipeg, where the May index was up 1.4 per cent from the April level.

The smallest one-month rise in the index was recorded in Halifax, where the index rose six-tenths of one per cent. The index was up from April in all of the 14 cities surveyed.

The survey measures price changes within the cities, but does not show where prices are highest or lowest.

On a national basis, the index rose eight-tenths of one per cent in May, due primarily to a sudden jump in food prices but also because of increased housing costs and higher provincial taxes on tobacco and alcoholic products. This increase — the largest one-month jump in six months — produced a 12-month rise in the national index of 8.9 per cent, as reported last week.

The national increase in food prices in May was 1.5 per cent, largely due to a 12.4 per cent jump in beef prices. This was reflected in the individual cities, with food — and particularly beef — prices singled out in all cases.

The over-all May increase in other cities: Regina, 1.3 per cent; Edmonton, 1.2 per cent; Calgary, Ottawa, and Thunder Bay, Ot., one per cent; Saskatoon and St. John's, Nfld., nine-tenths of one per cent; Montreal and Vancouver, eight-tenths of one per cent; Saint John, N.B., Quebec City and Toronto, seven-tenths of one per cent.

Callan Admits Massacre as Trial Ends

LUANDA (AP) — The trial of 13 mercenaries came to a dramatic close today as Costas Georgiou, alias Col. Callan, admitted guilt in the massacre of 14 British mercenaries and the killing of an Angolan soldier and a civilian.

"I am responsible, I gave the order for that execution and no one else," Georgiou told the five-member Angolan people's tribunal after a sudden change of heart about defending himself. "I realize the consequence, OK?"

He had previously refused to answer any questions in court.

Presiding Judge Ernesto da Silva said sentencing of the 10 British and three U.S. mercenaries will take place next week. The prosecution is demanding death by firing squad for all the accused.

One by one, the mercenaries took the microphone to plead for their lives. The first was Georgiou, a Briton of Greek-Cypriot origins.

"Costas Georgiou, tell the truth," he kept telling himself aloud.

"Did you kill anyone else?" da Silva asked after Georgiou took full responsibility for the massacre of the mercenaries. They had wanted to go home after Callan shot one of them for firing a rocket on friendly troops.

"Yes," said Callan. "I have killed a soldier and I have killed the civilian. I am telling you straight. I would not lie."

Holding the microphone with his manacled hands, Callan said: "I am not proud of my actions, and any sentence you give, I am prepared to take. More than anything I am afraid of prison. No one wants to die, but I am prepared to die."

Daniel Gearhart of Kensington, Md., was next. "Never again for any amount of money, for any cause will I ever become a mercenary again," he pledged.

Gary Acker, of Sacramento, Calif., told the court he had "learned a lot" since his capture in February after four days as a soldier of fortune. "It was wrong for me to come here because of my personal problems and it is wrong for governments to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries."

Defendant Gustave Grillo of Jersey City, N.J., a small-time racketeer who appeared as a friendly prosecution witness, said: "Words are not enough to apologize for entering somebody else's backyard to fight for money. I am prepared to fight for Angola, to work, to do anything possible for the people of Angola, and I accept the sentence of this court."

Andrew McKenzie, the former British paratrooper testifying from a wheel chair and cradling his left leg, which was amputated at the knee, admitted he took part in the mercenary massacre under Callan's orders but "did not murder any civilians." Prosecution witnesses had testified that McKenzie killed civilians.

Briton Colin Evans pleaded with the court "to give me the chance to go back in the world and tell everyone that to be a mercenary is not a job.

"It is a bad thing. It is disgusting," he said.

Defence lawyers, summarizing their cases before the people's tribunal Friday, blamed the United States and Britain for allowing the men to join mercenary forces that fought with the western-backed losing side in the war, which was won by a Marxist group, the Popular Movement.

Franchising The Investor

Now that Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis has tabled a bill restoring the property vote, Victoria city council can throw away a similar resolution it was going to foist on the annual Union of British Columbia Municipalities. Undoubtedly, there will be cheers in every mingy municipal council chamber across this parochial province at the minister's initiative. In fact, the property vote would influence the outcome of few elections, but it does negate the principle of one person, one vote. The British Reform Act of 1832 enshrined the principle of one man, one vote. On the fringes of the rancid empire it is still a matter of debate, it would seem.

Under the old system, sensibly abolished by the former NDP administration, a designated company representative was allowed to vote in the municipality where he resided as well as in the jurisdiction where the firm was loacted. In a few cases this meant some individuals had the opportunity of voting four or five times. The Curtis legislation would restrict a property owner to only one vote in each municipality, no matter how many pieces of property were owned in a specific jurisdiction. It would also restrict a shareholder to one vote for a company on one piece of property. While this corrects flagrant abuses of the old legislation it still negates the principle of representation by population. Nor does it seem to prevent a real estate development company owning various parcels of land from designating various shareholders or partners for each land parcel and telling them how to vote for the firm.

As Curtis said, anyone who paid taxes had a right to express an opinion in the affairs of local government. Yet business already has a much stronger clout in local affairs than an individual voter. In Victoria alone we have a strong chamber of commerce, a downtown businessmen's association and various shopping centre associations, all of which in one way or another lobby for business interests. This doesn't take into account the average city or town council which is almost invariably peopled by businessmen. How much clout does business need to get its point across?

The basic question here is whether or not investment in a municipality should be a condition of franchise? If a businessman lives in the community where he works he automatically has a voice. To give him an extra vote in another municipality simply because he works or employs people at a certain address negates the idea of representation by population. This legislation is anathema to a truly democratic electoral process.

Bigger Waves to Come

Always quick to complain, Victoria's tourist operators were a bit hasty and somewhat off-target in their rush to blame the provincial government this week for a dropoff in their business. Two weeks does not a tourist season make. It seems the entire industry in B.C. is in the doldrums. Traffic through Rogers Pass in the first quarter of 1976 was almost 10 per cent below the same period a year ago. Hotel occupancy in B.C. is down 2.9 per cent — in Vancouver five per cent. Fewer American vehicles crossed into B.C. this year.

The reasons? The American bicentennial celebrations this year undoubtedly will keep more U.S. travellers at home than usual. The rotten spring weather — cold temperatures and cloudy grey days — probably also deterred tourists. Americans, who are probably the largest group of summer visitors Victoria receives, may finally be fed up with our ever-increasing prices. Restaurants and hotels south of the border are considerably cheaper than here. And the three or four per cent discount on the U.S. dollar is no incentive.

But the tourist businessmen's main complaint about the ferries is probably the most important reason, although they do tend to exaggerate. (For example, the Princess Marguerite, which dumps its load right into the laps of several of the complaining attractions, reports a 24 per cent increase in passengers carried so far in June.)

The B.C. Ferries ad campaign should help to turn around the light load figures for the first part of June, but as officials have noted, the increase in fares has produced more resistance than was thought likely. Whether the decline is permanent or only temporary we won't know for the next couple of summers.

Tourism is only the first and most visible economic indicator of the effect of the fare increases on Vancouver Island. Not as easy to spot, but probably more permanent and far-reaching in its consequences is the impact the higher fares will have on the cost of living and the local economy.

Everything the Island imports will be more costly. Everything made here with imported materials will rise in price — and thus will be harder to sell on the mainland. It can only accelerate the movement of Victoria towards a lopsided employment picture.

The sharp drop-off in tourist business shows the dangers of depending upon a single industry. When the province is determinedly shrinking the civil service and other long-time local businesses are either shutting up or moving to the mainland — Bapco Paint, Ste. Michelle Wines and Hickman Tye Hardware are only some recent examples — it shows just how precarious Victoria's economic position is. Like a rock heaved into a pond, the doubled and tripled ferry fares are sure to have an ever-widening ripple effect. Tourism has been hit with the first small undulations on the surface; the waves to come will be more destructive and longer-lasting in their effects.

How to Stop Worrying And Live with the Pump

Sewage is to Victoria as trees are to Vancouver Island.

It laps at our shores, surfaces in school yards and pollutes shellfish. Our only solution to date is to pipe the stuff out to sea in ever-lengthening conduits. Upwards of five million gallons each day gush into the salt chuck, the secret shame of an area that bathes in the accolade of the Garden City.

At this primitive stage of development all our energy is concentrated on how to move the stuff around more efficiently and cheaply.

Which brings us to the proposed McMicking Point sewage pumping station.

The function of this controversial pump would be to gather up Oak Bay sewage, plus some from Saanich and Victoria, all of which is now being discharged at the tideline, and pump it to Clover Point where it would be disgorged a mile or so from shore.

The trouble is that Beach Drive residents are understandably upset about noise, smell and the general ambience of such a building close to their homes. A 133-name petition has been turned over to the Capital Regional Board asking that the pumping station be relocated at least 1,500 feet from any residence — a point along the Victoria Golf Course was suggested.

It seems ironic that Beach Drive residents would prefer the continual discharge of raw sewage almost outside their front doors as opposed to a pumping unit about the size of a house which would sweep it all away to Clover Point.

While the McMicking Point sewage outfall is some distance from residences of those who are protesting the pumping station, homes overlooking Shoal Bay do not have a view of pristine waters. The 1967 Sanitary Sewage Study of the Greater Victoria Area noted that the McMicking Point outfall was "the main source of pollution in adjacent shoreline waters; sewage slick and gross solids readily visible."

Nothing has changed since 1967.

Irony, though, has little in common with the cost of pumping sewage, and that is where the petitioners are doomed. To move the pumping site to the suggested Victoria Golf Course location would cost approximately $1,644,000 according to an engineering study. It would also require an access roadway across the course and a forcemain as well.

Oak Bay mayor Brian Smith, whose municipal political career may hinge on the location of a gurgling sewer pump, feels resident concern is "bang on." But the chief magistrate of Oak Bay points out that relocating the pump almost anywhere else would also mean higher energy costs to pump the stuff a longer distance to Clover Point.

Perhaps the crowning argument is if the site is relocated at inevitable higher costs, Victoria and Saanich, which are paying part of the cost, would pick up their money — not their sewage, it might be said — and go home.

As regional board chairman Jim Campbell says about the McMicking Point site: "It's dictated by a number of irreversible decisions of the past."

For example previous generations didn't deem it offensive to dump raw sewage on the beach. The proposed McMicking Point pumping station could eliminate up to nine raw sewage outlets which are now pouring raw sewage into Oak Bay waters, most of it at low tide line.

Campbell says the pumping station won't be visible from the road. Smith says he feels the visual and noise pollution have been conquered by the regional board.

That leaves smell.

Even now, tripping among the rocks at low tide along the beach is a massive assault on the olfactory nerve. But doughty Oak Bay will send a representative to similar pumping stations in the Seattle area and try to come up with a solution to this potential hazard.

Other than a hefty local assessment on those who want the pump relocated, it appears Beach Drive residents have no choice but to live with the pump in these days of financial restraint.

Still, it is up to three participating municipalities to do away with noise, smell and general ugliness so the resulting structure housing the pump will resemble almost any Oak Bay residence. — G.R.O.

Ready to Fight an Election

OTTAWA — Pierre Elliot Trudeau speaks English so fluently even down to swear-words, and he has been prime minister for so long, that it is easy at times to forget that he is in his heart and in his roots a Quebecker. Quebec is the pole from which Trudeau's emotions begin, and toward which his thoughts return. It defines him, limits him because he never has fully understood English Canada, and energizes him. It is the passion beneath his reason.

Psychology, therefore, and not politics, was the message that the provincial premiers took away from their mid-week private dinner with Trudeau at 24 Sussex Drive. "He was brilliant, tough, icy and passionate at the same time," said one premier later. "It was a tour de force that terrified poor old Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa."

Frank and Brutal

After lamb chops and kiwi fruit washed down with Chateau Figeac 1972, Trudeau assembled his guests in the living room and there, during a session that Bourassa later described as "frank and direct" but which other premiers remembered as "frank and at times brutal," Trudeau sketched out his plans to patriate the constitution.

The essence of Trudeau's intentions:

- He will get the constitution over here no matter what. If the premiers don't like it, and some don't, they can lump it. "I'm cool about it, You guys can do what you want," Trudeau told his guests at one point.

- Trudeau's commitment is personal, and visceral: "I don't intend to go down in history as the prime minister who failed to patriate the constitution," Trudeau said during the closed-door meeting. "If I fail, the constitution won't get patriated for 10 or 20 years. If ever."

- Trudeau is ready anxious almost, to battle the issue with Bourassa on the hustings in Quebec. "Good luck with your election," he told Bourassa at one point. "The timing is in my hands" — meaning that Trudeau can bring the issue to the political boil too late for Bourassa to exploit it during his 1977 election but in time for use in his own 1978 federal election.

PIERRE TRUDEAU
. . . terrified 'poor old Bourassa'

- The constitutional formula Trudeau already has announced is non-negotiable. Quebec can expect nothing more than the proposed amending formula that would give it and Ontario and combinations of the western and Atlantic provices a veto cover constitutional changes, plus a constitutional guarantee of French language rights. Bourassa brought up his standby demands for jurisdiction over communications, culture and immigration. "Even if we gave these to you, you'd only come back for more," answered Trudeau.

At no time during the session did Trudeau spell out his itinerary for patriating the constitution. He did, though, mention that Queen Elizabeth II would come to Canada in July, 1977, as part of her 25th anniversary celebrations, and most premiers left convinced that this is Trudeau's target date.

As a first step towards that long journey, the premiers will discuss the issue among themselves at their own meeting in Alberta in mid-August. They hope to be able to argue out a common front they then can present to Trudeau at the next first ministers' conference in Ottawa, in October.

In fact, Trudeau already is gaining some allies. "For the first time, there's a general will to bring the constitution back," said Nova Scotia's Gerry Regan.

In private, premiers — excepting Bourassa, admitted they would find it hard to oppose Trudeau. They fear that in a showdown most Canadians, even though few of them care about the constitution, would back Trudeau on the emotional issue of bringing the British North America Act to Canada. They also are worried that if they withhold consent and thus force Trudeau to act unilaterally he would have established a precedent for Ottawa to unilaterally change the constitution itself. "He has us where he wants us," said one premier. "And he knows it."

Shrewd Guess

This is the political calculation in Trudeau's strategy. A battle over the constitution is exactly the kind of issue his bedraggled government needs to restore its electoral prospects.

But don't discount the feelings behind the calculation. Trudeau is deeply worried by the backlash against bilingualism. He is convinced that economic power, and population, will shift irresistably away from Quebec toward the west. Patriation of the constitution therefore becomes Trudeau's chance, perhaps his last chance. to guarantee for Quebec a permanent role within Confederation and thereby to fix it forever into the larger whole. "I am ready to fight an election on this, and to lose it if need be," Trudeau told the premiers during their meeting.

Later, one premier commented: "I think he feels that if he has to lose the next election anyway, he'd be happy to lose it being a martyr for Quebec." Which is a pretty shrewd psychological guess.

The Sooke Committee for Incorporation respects the right of the press not to divulge its sources of information, but also knows that when a newspaper speaks editorially it must have it's facts straight.

Your editorial of June 16 Rush to Judgment was correct on only one point — there will be a referendum on June 22. That date was requested by the committee and approved by the minister of municipal affairs, and not imposed on us by the minister.

If the Capital Regional Board and three of its members had been making a study on incorporation for Sooke, then the Sooke Committee on Incorporation was not informed of its existance, furthermore the Municipal Act states that incorporation of any area into a municipality is strictly the business of the minister and the residents of the community. The regional board is not involved in any way.

The committee has held four workshops in the past five weeks and an open forum was held on the evening of June 16.

One reason for setting the June 22 date was to hold the referendum while interest was at its peak. If there is anyone in the area who is not well informed then their only excuse can be that they have not been listening.

We consider the entire piece to be editorializing at its worst and can only hope that your readers realize that the formation of a municipality of Sooke is strictly the business of the people of the area and that such matters should never be turned into a political football by an uninformed editorial writer.—Eric Butler, Chairman, Sooke Committee for Incorporation.

(Ed. Note — The Times regrets its error. There is a committee of the Capital Regional Board studying municipal status, but its terms of reference are limited to the Colwood-Langford-Metchosin area and do not include Sooke.)

Why the Rush?

Your editorial, Rush to Judgment, June 16 asks a pertinent question: "Why is Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis in such a rush to hold a vote on whether Sooke residents want to incorporate as a municipality?"

No doubt the Sooke-Jordan River Chamber of Commerce committee for incorporation will say that there have been several "workshops" and that everyone has had time to study the question. However, the boundaries were changed only a few days ago and a map of the new area was available from the department of municipal affairs only on June 10. On that day I picked up the last one available until more were duplicated. Of course, very few people have seen the new map, and no one has explained how the committee has managed to amend their "provisional budget" to fit the new area.

At a public meeting June 16—the first one and this one only being held because people protested that the workshops were not giving accurate information—the only thing that was made clear was that taxes would certainly increase and that the benefits of incorporation at this time were mainly in the minds of the committee and had little resemblance to reality.—Maurice Tozer, Box 820, Sooke.

Tannin Hazard

That good cup of tea and coffee and cocoa and the handsome oaks and other trees and shrubs have something in common — tannin. Research reported by Dr. M. F. Jacobson, graduate of MIT, and researcher at Salk Institute and the Center for Science in the Public Interest, Washington, D.C., shows tannin as a cause of liver cancer in experimental animals.

The tannin content of our city water shows up in its tint and taste. It would increase the average 100-500 milligrams of tannin in every cup of tea, coffee, or cocoa we drink.—G. Wellford, Victoria.

Camping Fees

In March I wrote a letter to Travel Industry Minister Grace McCarthy reminding her that in the Social Credit brochure Get B.C. Moving Again under the heading Senior Citizens, item six reads: "Provide senior citizens free use of provincial parks."

In a reply dated March 26 and signed by a director for the chief of management of the department of recreation and conservation, parks branch, was the following: "On behalf of the minister of recreation and travel industry, we are pleased to reply to your letter relating to the brochure Get B.C. Moving Again and to the concept of reducing camping fees for senior citizens." Hold it right there. The brochure says nothing about reducing fees, it states flatly, free.

The letter continues: "While it is too early to realize positive action in this regard, it is known that the matter of reducing senior citizens' campsite fees in B.C. provincial parks is under active review at this time.

"We certainly are aware of the impact of even a low camping fee on a small fixed income" (then they raise the fee from $2 to $4 in the most popular parks) "in recognition of this fact, we have been encouraging senior citizens to take advantage of the many provincial parks in which camping fees are not charged at all" (Please tell me where, on Vancouver Island, they are—the only free camps I know of are maintained by logging companies. If they are on the mainland and up north somewhere, what about ferry fares and increased gasoline prices?) "and of the off-season free period between September 10 and March 31 in the remaining campgrounds."

Actually they are telling senior citizens to go camping in the fall and winter. The coldest, rainiest and gloomiest time of the year, and when, as the book informs you, that servicing of the camps is not carried out.

So there you have it, senior citizens. What price Socred promises? and what a contrast to Ontario and some of the provinces where a more enlightened policy is in effect.—C. W. Fisher, 308-1023 Esquimalt Road.

On Tuesday the long-simmering Canadian debate on capital punishment comes to the boil when the Commons votes on second reading of the government's abolition bill. Prime Minister Trudeau made an impassioned last-ditch appeal to MPs this week and part of his speech is reproduced on the right. An opposing viewpoint appears in the current edition of Maclean's magazine, by George Jonas, a CBC producer and poet.

'Life Sentence Licence to Kill'

By GEORGE JONAS
Maclean's

"Please, judge, hang him!" wrote a London, Ontario, woman after a recent murder trial. A sick response? Commented the trial judge: "It's only human to react emotionally to murder. There's a lot of emotion on the other side, too. Those abolitionist fellows are not above cooking the books either."

His lordship has a point. The London lady may not be motivated by classical logic and pure reason, but then Solicitor General Warren Allmand himself sounds more intestinal than cerebral on the subject. One of his better-known gut reactions goes like this: "I won't be associated in any way with a hanging. It's an obscene and degrading measure . . . You just don't hang a person and solve all the problems." Now there's an insight: hanging doesn't solve all the problems. The question is, does it solve some?

As Oshawa, Ontario Crown Attorney Bruce Affleck tells it, there was a young man recently who shot his parents, then surrendered his still loaded rifle to an approaching policeman. When asked why he didn't shoot the cop as well, he replied with disarming honesty: "Because I don't want to hang." In practice he ran little risk of hanging, but how was the poor fellow to know that?

One Ontario policeman may be alive today because some killers are not yet sophisticated enough to realize our Solicitor General would rather resign than uphold the law he introduced himself in Parliament. Perhaps improved educational programs in prison would solve this problem, if no others.

Of course Allmand isn't alone. "I feel the cabinet supports me, I feel my caucus supports me . . . In fact, I feel more understanding and support on Parliament Hill than from people across Canada."

A very perceptive remark. Public opinion polls show about 81 per cent of Canadians in favor of retaining the death penalty. But then our prime minister's expressive shoulders seem to have been made for shrugging off such matters. "Responsible government," he commented engagingly, "doesn't work by public opinion polls or referendums." That should put us in our place. One election every four years is more than we deserve. Popular sentiment doesn't cut much ice with Allmand either. "I'd be more interested in one good argument," he said, one-upping Le Duc de Sussex Drive, "than 1,000 signatures on a petition."

Hmm. What are Allmand's own arguments? He says: "Execution doesn't erase the crime of murder." True. Neither does prison. Nothing erases the crime of murder. Should we, by an extension of this logic, punish it with nothing? Allmand says: "We know that most types of violent crime are not deliberately or rationally planned." Maybe, but nobody gets hanged for them either. Canadians want to retain the death penalty only for deliberate, rationally planned murder. Says the Solicitor General: "An examination of the evidence . . . indicates that capital punishment does not effectively lower the murder rate." A misstatement of fact. In 1975, when Allmand said this, Dr. Isaac Erlich's reputable study (among others) was already published, casting serious doubts on this bit of orthodoxy. On an empirical level the murder rate in Canada has increased since 1962, the last time capital punishment was implemented, by about 42 per cent (from 1.7 per 100,000 population to 2.4).

Now, as requested by Allmand, some arguments in lieu of another 1,000 signatures.

One: without the death penalty everyone currently serving a life sentence would become, like 007, licensed to kill. No one can be sentenced to life twice, but those serving one life sentence can and sometimes do murder fellow convicts, prison guards, or anyone who stands in their way.

Two: not even Charles Dickens would have expected the law to become such an ass as to offer incentives to killers. Yet under Allmand a person facing life imprisonment for armed robbery or another major crime would actually benefit by killing a witness or a policeman. It would increase his chances of escape and make no difference to his punishment. (Of course we all know how this problem would be solved by the more-enlightened-than-thou crowd: reduce penalties for armed robbery, rape, and other bagatelles. Vide, the Law Reform Commission recommendations: no life imprisonment, no prison for most propertycrimes, and three-year maximums for those unlikely to murder again.)

Finally, as one deputy police chief puts it, "My cops don't mind facing guns; it's facing the same guns that bugs them." What he is talking about is the myth that murderers seldom repeat their crime. It may be true enough of domestic and other impulsive killers (who would never face the gallows anyway) but it's emphatically untrue of the pros. They are the ones who would actually hang if the death penalty were retained, and so they should.

If Allmand says they shouldn't, what are the solutions he offers? "Better trained policemen . . ." Did Constables Gabriel Labelle, Leslie Maitland or James Lothian die because they had not been trained well enough? "Better equipped policemen . . ." The cops in Detroit look like invaders from outer space. You can't equip them any better short of giving each a Doomsday Machine, but Detroit is still Murder City (and Montreal is catching up). "Effective gun control . . . possible restrictions on the showing of violence on television . . ." Don't give us more laws, Allmand; put some teeth into the ones we have. Laws regulate the lawabiding: it's the teeth that bite crooks. Judy LaMarsh can't protect us from people who go to pieces over Kojak. Gun control might, perhaps, reduce impulsive violence, but it has zero effect on those who kill in cold blood for greed or lust. "Social and economic programs to remove the causes of crime"

Fine. We've been doing that for 20 years while crime got steadily worse, but let's continue. "Promote respect for legitimate authority in the home, the school . . . and government." By all means. One way of doing this is to hang convicted murderers.

The English legal philosopher Sir James Fitzjames Stephen observed that if murder could be prevented by the fine of one shilling it would still break the moral bonds of society to impose only a one-shilling fine on murderers. Of course a life sentence is not a shilling (nor is it a life sentence) but to many Canadians it still seems a cut-rate price tag on their own lives. When people feel undervalued, the moral bonds of society begin to show the strain.

'Deterrent Proof Lacking'

By PIERRE TRUDEAU

The crux of the question before us is whether execution is an effective and therefore justifiable weapon for the state to use in order to deter potential murderers.

There are those who sincerely believe that no man or group of men ever have the right to end a human life. They believe that life is a divine gift which only God has the right to take away. I am not one of those who share that belief.

Our law, from its earliest beginnings, has always recognized the right of an individual to kill another when there exist reasonable grounds for believing that killing an aggressor is necessary to the protection of one's own life or that of another.

Moral philosophers and theologians have recognized for many centuries the right of a country to defend itself in a just war, even when such defence involves the killing of enemies.

So the question before us is not whether execution by the state is justifiable per se. The question is whether state execution is an effective deterrent to murder, and therefore a justifiable act of collective self-defence.

The deterrent effect of capital punishment is at the very core of the issue, and since one's moral view of the justification of capital punishment is entirely determined by one's judgment of its deterrent effect, the proper focus of this debate is factual data and logical induction, not moral philosophy.

In that sense, the issue before us must be resolved by a practical rather than a moral judgment.

I know there are those who say that execution is justified because it prevents a murderer from ever again committing the same crime. It certainly does. But if you rely on that reasoning, you are killing a man not because his death may deter others from following in his footsteps, but because of what he might possibly do at some future time.

To justify such a preventive execution, there would have to be some reasonable grounds for believing that convicted murderer, if released into society, would murder again. In fact, the probability lies strongly in the other direction.

We know of only four people who have been found guilty of murder by a Canadian court, and convicted of murder a second time. In order to be absolutely sure that no murderer would murder again, we would have to take the lives of all persons convicted of either first-or second-degree murder, even though the probability is that an infinitesimal percentage of them would ever commit murder again if allowed to live. That's an unacceptably high price to pay in human lives for a sense of security insignificantly greater than we have now.

I might ask those who would execute a person to prevent a future murder how they could logically avoid advocating the execution of mentally ill people who are found to have homicidal tendencies?

Well, you may say, let's execute the murderer for the crime he has committed. Let's take a life for a life. Let's remove a savage animal from the human race.

I do not deny that society has the right to punish a criminal, and the right to make the punishment fit the crime, but to kill a man for punishment alone is an act of revenge. Nothing else. Some would prefer to call it retribution, because that word has a nicer sound. But the meaning is the same.

Are we, as a society, so lacking in respect for ourselves, so lacking in hope for human betterment, so socially bankrupt that we are ready to accept state vengeance as our penal philosophy?

Individuals who strike back at the murderer of a loved one and kill him in a frenzy of passionate grief have temporarily lost control of their reason. I have received letters from the parents and relatives of murder victims, demanding the death penalty for the murderer, and have been deeply sympathetic to the suffering of those who have suffered such a tragic and cruel loss of a loved one.

But the state cannot claim the excuse of blind grief or unreasoning passion when, long after the provocative act, and after calm and deliberate consideration, it kills a man.

My primary concern here is not compassion for the murderer. My concern is for the society which adopts vengeance as an acceptable motive for its collective behavior. If we make that choice, we will snuff out some of that boundless hope and confidence in ourselves and other people, which has marked our maturing as a free people.

We will have chosen violence as a weapon against the violence we profess to abhor. Who is so confident that he knows for sure that such an official endorsement of violence will not harden the society we were elected to improve, will not pervade gradually many different relationships in our society?

Who is so confident that he knows for sure that acceptance of state violence will not lead to the greater social acceptance of lesser forms of violence among our people?

Vengeance and violence damage and destroy those who adopt them, and lessen respect for the dignity and rights of others among those who condone them.

There is only one other possible justification for capital punishment — the one we started with — the belief that execution of murderers will protect society by acting as a deterrent to the commission of murder by other people.

There are some who adopt an experimental approach to the question of deterrence, like a scientist experimenting with different combinations of chemicals in the search for a new healing drug.

Let's try it, they say, and see if it works. If it does, we'll keep it. If it doesn't, we can always stop using it. Let's not slam the door, they say, on a possibly effective weapon against murder, on some specious philosophical grounds. There are innocent lives at stake. If capital punishment prevents just one murder, they say, it will be adequately justified.

That's compelling rhetoric, but it contains a fatal flaw, namely that we would be experimenting with human lives. Respect for human life is absolutely vital to the rights and freedom we all enjoy. Even the life of the most hardened criminal must be accorded some degree of respect in a free society.

If we take that life without proven purpose, without proven necessity, then we weaken dangerously one of the fundamental principles which allow us to live together in peace, harmony and mutual respect.

That is why free peoples have always insisted that the onus is on the person who would interfere with another's life or liberty to prove that such interference is necessary for the common good.

Strictly speaking, therefore, it is not up to me, as an abolitionist, to prove that the execution of murderers will not prevent other murders. It is up to the advocates of capital punishment to prove that it will. If they cannot, their case must fail.

At best, the statistics are inconclusive. The prove nothing. There is no evidence proving that the use of non-use of capital punishment has had any effect whatsoever on murder rates anywhere in the world.

I must confess I cannot understand why anyone would agree to kill a man without the least shred of assurance that his death would accomplish any worthwhile social purpose.

If penalties applied by the state against law-breakers cannot be justified for their rehabilitative, punitive or deterent value, they cannot be justified at all — not in a civilized society. Capital punishment fails on all three counts.

To retain it in the Criminal Code of Canada would be to abandon reason in favor of vengeance — to abandon hope and confidence in favor of despairing acceptance of our inability to cope with violent crime except with violence.

It is because I have an enduring confidence in mankind, and confidence in society's ability to protect itself without taking human life, that I am eager to support this bill and vote for the abolition of capital punishment.

Of Mice and Cows And the Barn Owl

It may seem like a long way from a Barn Owl's stomach to a cow's rumen but a recent bit of bird-sleuthing over on the mainland suggests a more direct link exists between these two organs than might at first be apparent.

The link is grass! No, not the kind you smoke; the kind cows eat; and the kind field mice live in.

So where do the field mice come in? Well, if there are no field mice, there are no Barn Owls; and, if cows eat the grass, there are no field mice.

At least that's one hypothesis that was drawn from this year's survey of the Barn Owl population of the Fraser River delta. Where last year, working down on the delta close to the Strait of Georgia, owl counters were surprised to find far more Barn Owls than they previously suspected to be in the area, this year, working farther up the delta — around such places as Aldergrove and Pitt Meadows — they almost drew a blank.

Where last year the owl counters turned up 40 nests in 140 barns, this year, covering a far larger area and more than 450 barns, they managed a paltry 10 nests.

The most likely reason for these low numbers is a chocolate brown critter that goes under the impressive scientific handle of Microtus townsendi but is better known as Townsend's Vole. If that name still doesn't ring a bell, try field mouse.

Townsend's Vole is a staple of a Barn Owl's diet. The birds go through phenomenal numbers of these little residents of the Fraser delta in the course of a year; the voles, on the other hand, reproduce at an equally phenomenal rate to offset the inroads of the owls. The result: the birds and the mice live in a delicate and, for the most part, stable equilibrium.

Occasionally, so far for reasons unknown, the mouse populations suffer a devastating drop and the owl populations react accordingly. The best-known example of this kind of intimate predator-prey relationship is the Snowy Owl-Lemming story where a sudden drop in the supply of Lemmings in the Arctic results in an equally sudden appearance of hundreds of Snowy Owls in southern Canada and the northern United States.

Barn Owls, being more sedentary types, must suffer through these periods of short supply. Their numbers may drop through death from starvation or hang on briefly as the birds turn to other less reliable and less accessible sources of food.

While the possibility of such a drop in mouse population cannot be ruled out as an explanation for the low owl count this year on the upper Fraser delta, other evidence suggests that habitat more than population dynamics is controlling the numbers of mice in that area.

Townsend's Voles are creatures of most fields and sedge meadows, the rather unkempt habitat that typifies that zone of transition between dry land and marsh, the kind of habitat found where the alluvial plain of the Fraser gradually gives way to the sea. They shun the well-manicured fields that are typical of the dairy farms farther inland.

Townsend's Voles are, of course, not limited to the delta of the Fraser River but can be found throughout Vancouver Island and many of the other off-shore islands from tidewater to alpine meadow. But wherever they are found they prefer the dense natural tangle of successive, uncontrolled annual growth of grasses to the (figurately speaking) antiseptically clean environment of a cow pasture.

A similar Barn Owl survey taken on the Saanich Peninsula earlier this year was also unproductive — no owls were found. The reasons for their absence here are fertile ground for speculation.

One theory has it that Peninsula owls are traditionally tree nesters instead of barn nesters and that as their long-used nesting trees disappeared they've had to seek others and these have not yet been found by the owl counters.

There's good foundation to support this theory. One big, old, partially hollow Douglas fir off Welch Road was a favorite haunt for Barn Owls until it came down in a winter gale two or three years ago.

On the other hand, we've never had a large Barn Owl population on Vancouver Island and the lack of open, field-mouse type habitat might be as good a reason for this as any.

The Price of Competition

audrey johnson

It's amazing what tortures human beings will put themselves through in the thrall of ambition. They make unbelievable sacrifices, submit themselves to emotional and physical strains that if sustained over any lengthy period would cripple them.

Most people can readily appreciate the stresses endured and presumably relished by politicians, statesmen and militarists in pursuit of a goal. But how many have stopped to consider that exactly the same forces are at work within the ambitious artist?

The artistic person's pleasure in exploiting and exploring a special gift, when translated into the determination to attempt the tallest peak in his range, becomes ambition; the same quality that fired an Alexander, a Napoleon, or a Churchill.

In every case, the super gifted willingly suffer for sake of that vision of straddling the topmost pinnacle.

The most agonizing obstacle courses run by any performing artist reaching for the top are the lot of the musician. The international type of competition which is today virtually mandatory for the aspiring instrumental virtuoso is far more grilling than the audition situation experienced by dancers and actors.

Recently the 29th Leventritt International Competition took place in New York. This year it was for pianists and Helen Epstein describes it in the New York Times as a "dreadfully serious, exhausting and tension-filled ordeal."

The Leventritt, you see, is one of the most distinguished as well as one of the most valuable of international competitions, ranking almost number one in the circuit that includes Montreal, Leeds, Geneva, Brussels, Munich, Warsaw and Moscow.

Cash award for the winner is $10,000 and other perquisites include an RCA recording contract and solo engagements with several major symphonies, starting with the New York Philharmonic.

Eighty-five pianists from 18 countries entered the 1976 contest. It is not held every year and is not always for pianists. The last was held three years ago and the next may be another three years away and will be for violinists.

So the audience reaction at the finals — winnowed down to five contestants — when it was announced, not for the first time in the Leventritt history, that no first prize would be awarded, is not to be wondered at. Catcalls and boos expressed the disappointment and frustration felt over the jury decision.

Some of the audience expressed doubts that the money was really in the coffers at all. Many thought the jury had gone to ludicrous extremes in setting standards.

But the musically distinguished jury defended its action by saying that only an artist immediately ready to launch a major career should be awarded first prize.

Said juryman pianist Rudolf Serkin later: "The general level of playing was amazingly high . . . Each of the finalists is absolutely equipped to perform in public . . . But this year was the first time we were giving a prize of $10,000 and we felt none were quite ready for it. Each one had something but no one had everything."

Well, does anyone? Has any astute critic really ever heard any pianist they could say had everything to an equal degree?

I can't escape the impression that Serkin's comment puts a dollar premium on the pianists' accomplishments.

Comments from some of the contestants, as reported in the Times, reveal something of the stress and strain of such competitions.

You have to have nerves of steel and not crack under pressure, said one. You can't afford to be human. A girl finalist commented that she had never had to go through pressure of this kind before.

"The worst part is the exhaustion," she said. "You're under stress all the time. My neck and back feel like a solid knot."

There was a time when a pianist winning an international competition was guaranteed a career, a name that would attract the attention of concert agents, conductors and audiences. That was around 20 years ago. Now things are different, say those in the know. Today's aspiring soloist has to make the rounds and do well in several international contests if he wants to become firmly established on the success ladder.

But though it's often an expensive endeavor, frequently frustrating and always exhausting, ambition will continue to funnel some of each year's fresh crop of pianists into the competition circuit in the hope of winning the race to the top.

One of this year's Leventritt pianists commented that he'd rather put his money on a horse than a contestant in a music competition.

"Every jury's going to pick a different winner because there are many schools of playing — or because they may be tired and hungry when it's your turn to play."

A wise comment that underscores a nagging doubt as to the artistic validity of such rugged competitions, even though most contestants esteem them solely as a means — possibly the only means — to a passionately desired goal.

MARRIAGE BY IMPULSE

LAS VEGAS — Las Vegas is one of the few cities where impulsive couples have the "magic" opportunity to dash out and get a marriage license at 3 a.m., and it's worth $15,000 to the city fathers to preserve the spell.

The Clark County commission debated a proposal to save that much by closing the county clerk's marriage licence office, which is now open 24 hours a day, for eight hours each night.

Comedy for Openers

Michael Hodgson and Linda Hardy in 6 Rms Riv Vu

For anybody who has had difficulty in deciphering the cryptic title of Phoenix Summer Theatre's opening production — it plays Friday and Saturday at the on-campus Phoenix Theatre — 6 Rms Riv Vu is classified advertising shorthand for the rental announcement of a six-room apartment with a river view.

It's a bright and airy comedy, a first play by advertising copy writer Bob Randall that was given a warm reception during the 1972-73 Broadway season. It was also broadcast on nation-wide TV in 1974 starring Carol Burnett and Alan Alda.

The story is of an encounter between a man and woman, amusing and likable people, who find themselves accidentally locked in an empty apartment by a chuckle-headed superintendent.

The Phoenix production is directed by John Krich and features Michael Hodgson and Linda Hardy in the lead roles.

The theatre will be dark June 28 and will open again June 29 with The Real Inspector Hound by award-winning playwright Tom Stoppard. It's about two theatre critics reviewing an Agatha Christie type mystery and becomes a send-up of critics and thrillers. It has delighted both London and New York audiences.

There will be no performances June 30 or July 1, but on July 2 the third play will join the repertory; Robert Bolt's comedy, The Thwarting of Baron Bolligrew, which is a fun-fantasy package about knights errant, dragons, an eight-foot basset hound and more.

Harvey Miller and Bindon Kinghorn of the UVic theatre faculty are directors of Hound and Baron respectively.

Classes at Bastion

Theatre and creative dance classes during the month of August are being offered by Bastion Theatre. The summer theatre school has always proved popular with Victoria youngsters who by August are becoming a little bored with other activity.

The classes will be divided into juniors, 7-10 years, Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons; intermediate, 11-4 years, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday mornings and afternoons, and seniors 15 years and over, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings from 5 to 6:30 p.m.

There will be a creative dance series for adults Mon- 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. and for children Tuesday-Thursday-Saturday, 1:30 to 2:30 p.m.

Instructors are Karel Loganhume for junior drama and creative dance, and Ian Harrison for intermediate and senior drama.

Ms. Loganhume holds a B.F.A. degree with distinction specializing in theatre in education. She has been Dr. Barbara McIntyre's academic assistant in children's drama work at the University of Victoria for the past three years, and is an exponent of the Laban Art of Movement.

Harrison is a graduate of the University of B.C. and Vancouver City College Theatre Arts Course. He teaches drama at Abbotsford Junior Secondary School and has been seen on several occasions in such CBC dramas as The Beachcombers and The Manipulators.

Courses will run from Aug. 2-21. Information regarding fees and registration can be obtained at Bastion office, 1002 Wharf, or by calling 386-8301.

Arts Grants Confirmed

Although only one half of the B.C. Cultural Fund apportionment of funds was made available for distribution by Victoria Community Arts Council this spring, CAC president James McVie says awarding of annual grants in full to affiliate groups will be carried out by the organization.

The groups, which include music, theatre, dance and visual arts organizations registered with the council, will thus be able to close their books on their season programming, which was based on anticipated funding from the B.C. Cultural Fund through the CAC.

In order to bring this about the CAC will enter into a deficit banking situation until such time — hopefully soon after July 5 — as the balance of the expected government funds is received.

The CAC is seeking outstanding arts students leaving educational institutions for continuing study in recognized arts schools. On acceptance a student may apply for a CAC bursary.

The number of bursaries available is limited and applications will be approved on recommendation of senior secondary school principals and arts directors.

Concert Tonight At Conservatory

Works by Beethoven, Telemann, Schumann and Schubert will be played at a senior student concert presented tonight at 8 p.m. by Victoria Conservatory of Music.

The artists are Madeline Wheeler, piano; Paul Thompson, violin; Sheila Stanley, oboe, and David Becker, viola. There is no admission charge for the concert, which takes place at Craigdarroch Castle.

Donations to the bursary-scholarship fund will be accepted.

Bailey Requests New Hearst Trial

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — A lawyer for Patricia Hearst said Friday he will file a motion for a new trial on behalf of the convicted newspaper heiress.

F. Lee Bailey made the disclosure after a two-hour meeting with Miss Hearst, who is being held here in the Metropolitan Correctional Centre.

A copyrighted story the San Diego Union newspaper quotes Bailey as saying he will ask for the new trial in August after a new judge is appointed.

Bailey said his request will be based on a defence contention that the government withheld evidence that would have tended to reflect Miss Hearst's innocence. He also said he plans to introduce new evidence.

Miss Hearst is undergoing a 90-day diagnostic study prior to sentencing after her conviction for taking part in a bank robbery in San Francisco in 1974.

TORONTO — Ernest Caron, 47, formerly of Montreal and Woodstock, Ont., who is charged with the attempted kidnapping of 14-year-old Signe Eaton, was denied bail Friday.

Caron, who has remained silent since being arrested Tuesday, refused to answer any questions or acknowledge that he was being spoken to at the bail hearing.

HARTFORD, Conn. — No one slept on the sidewalk for Bob Dylan but fans spent the night and thousands stood in line Friday in 80 degree temperatures for tickets to see Elvis Presley, and he's not expected for six weeks.

Four extra policemen were assigned to the Hartford Civic Centre and the lines were orderly — no one stepping on anybody's blue suede shoes so as to cause attention, anyway.

The lines formed Thursday at 11 p.m. when about 500 persons appeared with sleeping bags and lawn chairs to spend the night outside the box office entrance.

MIAMI — Four years and a jail term later, Watergate burglar Bernard Barker still has high regard for Richard Nixon, John Erlichman and E. Howard Hunt, and if he had it all to do over again he probably would act the same.

Baker, now a Miami city sanitation inspector, spoke Thursday to the Miami Springs Kiwanis Club on the fourth anniversary of the break-in at the Washington headquarters of the Democratic National Committee.

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Clarence Pickard, a bicycling octogenarian, says he is "just plain tuckered" and suffering from bronchitis, and will cut short the 4,200-mile cross-America bike trip that he started in Virginia last month.

Pickard, 86, was headed back to his hometown of Indianola, Iowa, today after ending the trip at his son's home in Columbia.

OTTAWA — The post office has issued two stamps commemorating Canadian writers Robert W. Service and Germaine Guevremont.

The stamp honoring Mrs. Guevremont, a French-Canadian writer, is from a painting by Antoine Dumas, depicting the opening scene from hernovel Le Survenant — the Outlander.

The Robert Service stamp was designed by Peterborough artist David Bierk and illustrates the final stanza of the poem The Cremation of Sam McGee, one of the most famous pieces of literature to come out of the Canadian North.

IMPRESSIONIST PAINTER DIES

MONTREAL (CP) — Funeral services were held Friday for Michel Rostand, an impressionist painter known internationally for his miniature canvases as well as his larger works.

A native of Nice, France, Rostand started painting as a hobby in 1925 at the age of 31 after graduating in law from the University of Vienna.

He continued his hobby during the 1930s while following a law career.

In 1946 he took up painting as a profession and in January, 1948, exhibited in Paris at the Salon des Arts Libres and the Salon d'Hiver.

Judge Blows His Top

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — "I'm fed up with this nonsense," thundered the judge who has to cope with the flood of phoney Howard Hughes "wills." Then federal agents stepped up and snapped handcuffs on the man before him.

The next mail to arrive at the Clark County courthouse brought two more purported wills, raising the total to 32.

Probate Judge Keith Hayes vented his exasperation Friday on Grover Walker, who said he was a former aide to the billionaire and represented an illegitimate son, Richard Robard Hughes.

Both are wanted by authorities in New Mexico.

Walker, saying he had been assigned by the billionaire to act as liaison with his son and was acting on the younger Hughes' behalf, filed one of the purported "wills" last month. It left all of Hughes' fortune, estimated at $2.5 billion, to Richard Hughes.

Enough Work —Going Fishing

SALEM, Ore. (UPI) — Dick Banton is quitting his $26,000 a year job as assistant secretary of state to go fishing in the South Seas.

"What better time in my life to do something I've always wanted to do — when I'm alone?" the 40-year-old Banton asked Friday.

Banton, recently divorced, said "my children are not little bitty kids. They have their own career plans in mind. They're pretty well directed."

"I'm not really hurting anyone in my family by doing this."

Banton pulled out a photograph of the tiny fishing villake of Umatac Bay in Guam.

"That's were Magellan stumbled onto the beach," he said.

"It's pretty, you know. It's quiet. I mean in a place like that you don't even need a car."

Banton wants to be a charter fisherman operating out of Guam. He also plans to supplement his fishing income with consulting work and teaching data processing.

"I've had my idea for a long time, and I feel as though Guam's the place to implement it," he said.

"My brother lost his life in the South Pacific. I feel somewhat motivated to go where he was. He was very important in my life."

Banton said he won't regret leaving his job and might even return to government work in the future.

"I feel as though I've done much of what I set out to achieve in this job," he says.

He'll leave Aug. 14, and he plans to pass the international dateline on his birthday.

"So, I won't have a birthday this year. I can stay forty."

Jus·Rite PHOTO TIPS

FILL-IN FLASH — is a MUST if you want to get more "color" in your color pictures outdoors. (Except for cloudy-bright days or in open shade) fill-in flash can be utilized to improve almost any picture, providing your subject is within flash distance — 6 to 10 ft. for instamatics, up to 20 ft. with other cameras.

Flash lightens dark shadows caused by bright sunlight, separates subject from background, and improves facial expressions. Now your subject doesn't have to squint into the sun. You can use the sun for backlight or sidelight, and get a much happier subject and a much better picture.

For more information on fill-in flash, come in to Jus-Rite Photo and ask the Certified Photographic Counsellors.

Double Giguere Trial 'Abuse'

OTTAWA (CP) — The lawyer for Senator Louis Giguere, who appears in court here Monday on criminal charges related with the Sky Shops affair, says he is concerned about the fact his client faces similar charges in both Quebec and Ontario.

Bruno Pateras said in a telephone interview from Montreal that the decision "smacks of abuse of process." He said it is very unusual to proceed in two jurisdictions on similar charges based on the same evidence.

"I have never seen it happen," said Pateras, who has represented the Crown in several cases, including last year's price-fixing charges against a group of Eastern sugar refineries.

The RCMP decided in April to lay charges in Ontario of conspiracy and accepting a benefit against the senator and four businessmen, including National Hockey League President Clarence Campbell, after a dispute with Quebec authorities over handling the case.

The two criminal code charges are based on alleged payment of $95,000 to the senator, a former Liberal party fund raiser, in return for use of his influence in obtaining a duty-free shop lease extension at Montreal's Dorval airport for Sky Shops Export Ltd.

The five men reappear in Provincial Court Monday when it is likely a date for preliminary hearing will be set. Pateras said the senator will choose trial by judge and jury.

The Crown prosecutor in the case, Rod McLeod, says he will proceed with the case.

Since the original charges were laid in Ottawa, a closed pre-inquiry into the affair has been completed in Montreal. The RCMP, which collected evidence on the matter, objected to Quebec's use of this rare procedure because they believed there was enough evidence to go directly to trial.

Earlier this week, Judge Maurice Rousseau of Quebec sessions court decided there was enough evidence to order Senator Giguere to appear in court on a charge of illegally accepting a benefit of $95,000.

The Quebec charge against Senator Giguere is more substantive. It does not relate to conspiracy, but the actual act. The four other men have not been charged in Quebec.

Pateras said there may be grounds to invoke res judicata, a defence used when a defendant is charged more than once on the same evidence.

But he said the question of double jeopardy only arises when there has been a decision in one of the cases.

The Montreal lawyer said he objected to Justice Minister Ron Basford and to Solicitor-General Allmand about the decision to proceed in Ontario but was told by Allmand there was nothing wrong with the RCMP's decision.

McLeod, a lawyer with the Ontario attorney-general's department, said in a telephone interview from Toronto that the Crown will continue to proceed in Ontario.

AIR CANADA TALKS URGED

OTTAWA (CP) — Labor Minister John Munro has sent a telegram to the Canadian Air Line Employees' Association urging the union and Air Canada to return to mediation to solve a long-standing dispute over job security at the airline's Winnipeg-based finance operation.

The telegram says that Munro recognizes the issue of job security involving about 600 workers is a highly-complex and emotional one.

A spokesman for Munro said his department is exploring every possible avenue open for a solution and would be prepared to suggest means to resolving the dispute.

The dispute escalated Wednesday when Air Canada announced suspension of the finance branch working out of Winnipeg.

Union Claims AIB Error

THOMPSON, Man. (CP) — Union officials here say they have found "an arithmetic error" in the Anti-Inflation Board's figures which, if corrected, could enable the union to receive its negotiated raise of 18.5 per cent.

In a news release Friday, Dick Martin, president of Local 666 of United Steelworkers of America, said, "we have been in contact with Mr. Tansley's office."

He said AIB administrator Donald Tansley has agreed to meet with steelworker representatives at 2 p.m. today.

"I am hoping this presentation will improve our position and lead to the restoration of our contract. That is the whole objective of our strike and presentation," Martin said.

Pressed for a more specific explanation of the "error", a union spokesman said, "the accountants were up all night with it. It's just too complicated and that's the only answer you can give for it."

"What we've got now," the spokesman continued, "is that they're looking at this contract differently. What Tansley's decision is going to be we don't know."

But it was evident that the mood now is optimistic that the AIB will look favorably on a new interpretation, and that a drawn-out strike in this northern Manitoba community will be avoided.

Before The Judge

Three men learned Friday in separate cases before Judge William Ostler of Victoria provincial court that disobedience of orders from the justice system can be time-consuming and expensive.

Jacob Joseph Knelson, 44, of 4061 Larchwood, pleaded guilty to a Saanich charge of failing to go to the Saanich police station at 8:30 a.m. June 9 for fingerprinting in connection with a charge which was later stayed.

Defence lawyer Michael Hutchison said Knelson had found a job two days before his date with the fingerprinters and didn't want to jeopardize it. He conceded Knelson had a lengthy record but pointed out his client had been in custody for eight days while awaiting hearing on the no-show charge.

Ostler noted Knelson was sentenced only last April to 20 days for failing to appear in court and failing to comply with a probation order. Taking the eight days into account, he jailed Knelson for 20 more.

Port Alberni resident Ralph William Clements, 31, pleaded guilty to three Victoria charges—stealing a 10-speed bicycle April 25, 1974; failing to appear in court on that charge July 3, 1974, and failing to report to a bail supervisor Nov. 18, 1975, in the same case.

Ostler said only the fact that Clements had no previous record allowed the imposition of fines. They were $200 for the theft, $100 for missing court and $200 for failure to report for a total of $500.

Russel Albert Turner, 17, of 4182 Oakridge Crescent, pleaded guilty to two Victoria charges—possession of a small amount of marijuana at about 1 a.m. June 11 and failure late June 10 to comply with a condition of a release order.

Drugs prosecutor Jack Kenny said the marijuana was found after Turner was checked in the Colony parking lot, 2852 Douglas. Regular prosecutor Armand Petronio said police also found on Turner a copy of a release order made June 10 on another charge.

One condition of the earlier release was that Turner obey an 11 p.m. curfew but, said Ostler, "he didn't even obey the curfew for one night . . . it's hard to imagine more wilful disobedience."

Turner had spent seven days in custody awaiting hearing and Ostler set a nominal one-day term for the marijuana and a $100 fine for the curfew violation.

Detention in custody was ordered by Ostler for Victoria area resident Tracy Lee Levers, 17, address not known, on a Victoria charge of failing to report to a bail supervisor daily between April 23 and 30.

She pleaded not guilty to the charge and will face trial July 20.

Ms. Levers already is scheduled for trials July 20 and 21 on seven charges of false pretences and three other charges of violating various conditions of earlier releases.

Gilles Doiron, 20, of 647 Michigan, was charged with assault causing bodily harm Thursday evening in Victoria to Richard Hall, a bar worker at the Bastion Inn, and was remanded for one week by Ostler for plea.

The judge ordered Doiron's release on his own recognizance in the sum of $500. (Outside court, police said a barman suffered facial cuts which required 10 stitches to close.)

Surrey resident Robert Randall Schindelka, 26, appeared on a charge of trafficking in heroin in Esquimalt April 16. At the request of Legal Aid duty counsel Lenore Boyes, the case was remanded by Ostler to Tuesday for a bail discussion and further hearing.

July 19 was set by Ostler as the trial date for a charge against Ottawa area resident Joel Thomas Pinkus, 18, of theft of 51 pairs of jeans June 10 from a clothing store. The judge ruled Wednesday that Pinkus would be detained in custody until the case was ended.

Traffic court fines Friday were led by a total levy of $650 against Bruce Herbert Smith, 18, of 1205 Rudlin, who pleaded guilty to an Esquimalt charge of dangerous driving and driving with a blood-alcohol reading of more than .08 per cent Feb. 21.

Fined $350 each after pleading guilty to separate charges of impaired driving were John Marshall Hagar, 20, of 2713 Cavendish, stopped Tuesday in Oak Bay, and James Harrison, 41, of 885 Old Esquimalt, April 23 in Esquimalt.

UN Session Disappointed, But the Informal Forum Had Some Good Moments

Gateway to Forum . . . using old tin and logs

Concern Found Behind the Fun

It's a week since Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, and the related yet quite unrelated Habitat Forum ended in Vancouver.

But for me the memory lingers on.

Though it's not so much the memory of the success of Habitat itself, for it was pretty dull, ended in discord and no one is really claiming that it was a success.

But I did spend a couple of afternoons at the informal Habitat Forum down at Jericho Beach and came away with a few things to remember.

Even the Forum earned its share of criticism from the media.

It was called a miniature PNE, nothing more than a carnival by the sea where people went to eat, drink and be merry.

And to a certain extent, the critics were right. There were many who just went to enjoy themselves. Everywhere there were booths selling foods from many different lands and it's true that it was not any of the guest speakers but the beer hall that drew the biggest crowds each day. And so, for some, it was a carnival by the sea.

But I felt it was more.

Behind the gaiety, the songs, the dances and the beer . . . the ideal and the concern were there.

A tremendous amount of credit must go, I believe, to the people who worked so hard on the site for Habitat Forum. Here, displayed to perfection was the very concept of recycling used or wasted materials; the old hangars converted into meeting halls and showplaces; the logs washed ashore and left over from B.C.'s main industry turned into seats and walkways and giant toys for children to play on. This in itself was a lesson.

Clustered on the hillside above the hangars were many interesting examples of housing for the world's poor and disaster-stricken. There were geodesic domes, cheap forms of do-it-yourself homes, cardboard dwellings to house those suddenly made homeless by things like earthquakes, and more.

And toiling away amongst them was B.C.'s own young log-home builder James Long of Houston, quietly putting across his message that for cheaper and more soundly-constructed homes Canadians could do no better than return to the materials used by the country's pioneers.

Down below in the old hangars there were films to see like the very disturbing anti-nuclear power documentary "Powers That Be" narrated with feeling by actor Jack Lemmon, lectures on everywhere from China to Cuba to hear, and people to meet like Rajeev Sethi.

Rajeev is a young Indian from Delhi, a consultant with the Haruana Government Small Scale Industries Corp. who was sponsored at the Forum by the International Planned Parenthood Federation.

He described himself as having a very informal education — a designer largely concerned with communications. But Rajeev Sethi was a typical example of the many young people who brought forth, and listened to, the living problems of the world's poor. And that was the idea behind the Forum.

A 27-year-old who became interested in housing at the age of five when he cut up shoe boxes and made them into little cardboard dwellings, Rajeev was a hit at Jericho. Twice daily, people would crowd into his little tent-like structure inside one of the hangars to watch a simple bicycle-powered slide display dealing with the housing problems in India's villages and to hear his almost hypnotic voice.

The basic drawings, done by the villagers themselves, and his appeal were very moving. But Rajeev was unhappy that more people actually involved in rural development weren't attending his sessions.

"The specialists haven't been coming," he admitted a little sadly. "What is very tragic is that no one seems very concerned about the rural areas."

His own concern is over the lack of communications. People design buildings for the villages, he says, but do not seem to be able to get through to the villagers themselves the purpose of the buildings.

Then, despite the hypnotic voice, people get restless. Some leave. There is so much to see. So little time.

And Brother Blue, who has taken a break from his soul story-telling and dancing to sit in on one of Rajeev's sessions, is upset.

"This is an extraordinary man!" cries out Brother Blue, standing up. "I like his questions, and I like what he is doing. Bless him."

But Rajeev understands that people here are time-conscious.

"They come in and they like what they see and what they hear but all the time their head remains concerned with what they're missing elsewhere," he said. "Everyone wants to be quick, quick."

Of course, part of his message, dealing with land-sharing ("There are no places for palaces in a sea of poverty") doesn't go down too well in our affluent society. But Rajeev holds no grudges.

"Over here, I don't think it's that you're less concerned, it's just that you're very far away from it," he said. "That leads to bad values and bad ideas. But I don't think people are really mean or anything like that.

"Or, at least, I wouldn't like to believe so. . ."

Mysterious Sooke Resort to Re-Open?

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Shrouded with mystery, the subject of countless rumors, the lavish million dollar Grouse Nest Resort in Sooke may yet re-open.

Hasaam Kamil, president of Grouse Nest Resorts Ltd. told the Times a study is under way to determine the feasibility of such a plan.

The study began two months ago, he said, and is expected to take another four months to complete.

The resort, situated in 600 acres of woodland and shorefront on the eastern edge of Sooke Harbor was renovated at a cost of more than half a million dollars in 1964.

A consortium of unnamed investors from Zurich, Switzerland had bought the property two years earlier with the intention of creating a luxury resort based on old world tradition and splendor.

Comprising a main lodge and seven A-frame villas, it was heralded as one of the most exclusive hideaways on the west coast and boasted one of the finest European cuisines in the country.

However, after two short seasons it closed, an economic failure.

A few years ago Kamil, in an interview, said there had proved to be not sufficient population in the Victoria area to support the hotel and dining room operation. Rather than compromise on quality, he said, the decision was made to close the resort.

He and his family have continued to live in an apartment in the main lodge. The grounds have been kept up and the buildings maintained but for all intents and purposes there hasn't been a paying guest since 1966.

Rumors about the resort were sparked long before its closure.

Residents in Sooke wondered why, for example, the new owners had to bring workmen from Europe to do the renovating.

They also looked with suspicion on the ominous No Trespassing and Beware of Dog signs that still hang from trees and posts along the perimeter of the property. There was even talk of armed guards.

Kamil once explained that European artisans and craftsmen had to be brought over because there was no one in Canada who could do the intricate remodelling. The workmen stayed a year and then left.

Black Labradors are kept on the property but, Kamil has said, they are more family pets than guard dogs. And, he has maintained, there have never been armed guards.

Since the resort closed, the mystery of the place has deepened.

Part of the reason for that is the enigma surrounding Kamil's origins and the source of his obvious wealth.

Explosion Rips Service Station

Service station attendant Nicky Radic, 21, opened for business with a bang today.

Part of the Mohawk station at Mike's Auto Repairs, 1911 Oak Bay, blew up at 8:22 a.m. sending Radic to hospital with burns to both legs, face and left hand. He was admitted to Royal Jubilee in satisfactory condition.

Victoria fire department said Radic had just opened the station and went to a small room at the rear of the premises containing electrical circuits and switches where he turned on an air compressor.

The switch ignited vapor from open containers of gasoline which were in the same room, assistant chief Roy Boothroyd said.

Burning debris scattered and filled the masonry building with smoke but did not ignite the structure itself.

Front windows were blown out, the electrical panel was destroyed and electrical engine testing equipment damaged for a total cost estimated at $5,000.

Radic, of 412-535 Niagara, was picked up by a passing motorist who drove him two blocks to Jubilee emergency.

'Fear' Tactics Threaten Parks

An executive of the B.C. Wildlife Federation today accused Forests Minister Tom Waterland of using "fear" tactics as a means of opening the door to logging in provincial parks.

Howard English said it was "utter nonsense" for the minister to claim the setting aside of more land for parks would result in the loss of jobs, and multiple use of parklands, might be the answer.

"The minister is just reviving the issue of multiple use of parklands—a policy which the logging industry pressed for during the late sixties," he said.

"The argument for multiple use in the sixties was that trees in parks were over-matured and there was no recreational values in stands of matured timber," he noted. "Now the argument is jobs."

"It's a perennial issue," he added. "The logging industry thinks its entitled to all the timber in the province whether in Beacon Hill Park or elsewhere. It refuses to acknowledge that recreation, wildlife, fisheries and tourism have also a stake in forest lands."

English noted the government is being deluged with requests for more parklands from communities in all parts of the province.

"I suggest this is one reason why Waterland said B.C. can no longer afford to set aside more land as parkland," he said. "He is attempting to counter these requests."

"These communities are not asking for too much, English added. "After all most of the land in B.C. was leased out to industry. Other resources were totally ignored."

Victoria Sierra Club president Bruce Hary said Waterland's suggestion of logging parks is a short term solution.

"It's absurd to pretent that logging some prime areas of parkland will have more than a minor, temporary effect," he said.

Welder Trapped By Engine

A Sidney man escaped serious injury Friday when an engine he was welding fell on him and caught fire.

Lionel Kidson, 53, of 9775 Third, was in satisfactory condition today at Rest Haven Hospital where he was taken with leg injury, face cuts and bruises.

Police said Kidson was working at home when the engine, supported by a block, slipped free and pinned him. Two passersby went to his aid and lifted the engine off before Kidson was burned. There was no structural damage.

Government St. Paving Planned

Victoria city engineering department advises this Sunday between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. paving crews will be working at the intersections of Yates and Government and Johnson and Government, weather permitting.

Scientific Detective Finds Clues in Worms

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

On the job for only six months and with no staff or laboratory, Dr. Ralph Brinkhurst, head of ocean ecology at the Pat Bay Institute of Ocean Sciences, has six programs under way.

Brinkhurst, one of the founders of Pollution Probe, began work at Pat Bay in January.

A specialist in zoology and entomology, the marine biologist's first self-appointed assignment was to give the institute's oceanographers, chemists and mathematicians a series of lectures.

Like a detective, Brinkhurst uses sludge worms and other marine animals as clues to speed up exploration programs of other departments in the institute.

As an example, using the oceanographic vessel Sea Lion, plankton will be studied in Haro Strait at the same time oceanographers are trying to follow the pattern of water from the Pacific mixing into strait water.

To prevent disasters, Brinkhurst said knowledge of change in currents is essential.

"Take, for instance, the Peruvian anchovetta (small sardine) fishery," Brinkhurst said. "When the el Nino current shifted, the bottom fell out of the fishery. Such events can be catastrophic."

Brinkhurst explained that the Peruvians make chicken feed from the anchovettas and when the fishery failed a chain reaction was a slump in the chicken industry.

BRINKHURST

A summer student will be employed for the Haro Strait project as well as one planned for the Colquitz River in Saanich.

Brinkhurst said the Colquitz River was "a small private project," designed to help Saanich solve its pollution problems. Dr. Bob Langford, the marine biologist retained by Saanich for its waterways program, is a former student of Brinkhurst.

Brinkhurst said study of the river's bottom animals will, hopefully, allow Saanich to trace the source of pollution in the river.

A study will also be made of Saanich Inlet where it is known there is no oxygen in the deepest parts. This study, Brinkhurst said "will help us understand more about the artificial lack of oxygen (usually caused by pollution)."

This year, the federal fisheries department introduced anti-dumping legislation.

Working in co-operation with Dr. C. S. Wong, head of ocean chemistry, Brinkhurst will assess what effect the dumping of wood wastes has on sea life, particularly how it affects the oxygen supply.

Joining the Controlled Ecosystem Pollution Experiment (CEPEX) team stationed nearby, Brinkhurst also plans to trace chlorophyll in local waters, using aircraft equipped with specialized monitoring equipment.

"We'll also have a parallel trial, tracking from a boat," he said.

The presence of sludge worms is a sign of pollution and Brinkhurst, who is internationally known for his environmental expertise, is continuing his studies on various species of sludge worms.

Collaborating with Brinkhurst, Dr. Narinder Kaushik is carrying out "highly refined laboratory experiments" in his laboratory at the University of Guelph.

It will be 18 months before Brinkhurst's laboratory is built. Meanwhile, he is assembling the equipment needed for the day he has his own laboratory again.

Neonex Seeking Delisting in U.S.

VANCOUVER (CP) — James Pattison, president of Neonex International Ltd., says the company has filed a delisting application with the United States Securities Commission and the American Stock Exchange.

Neonex wants its common shares withdrawn from listing and registration, he said.

Pattison said the company has considered the broadcasting business as a further area of expansion in Canada. Only Canadians or Canadian companies are allowed ownership of broadcasting licences.

Pattison also said that in the light of recent legislation, it is desirable that the company, as a Canadian company, should continue to be an eligible Canadian corporation as that term is being used in legislation.

A third reason, he said, was that Neonex directors and advisers though the winthdrawal to be in the best interests of all of its shareholders.

"We have considered the position of our American shareholders in pursuing such a course of action," Pattison said in a company press statement, "and (we) are satisfied that in view of the fact that the major trading of the company's shares takes place on the Toronto Stock Exchange, they would not suffer any difficulties in trading in the company's shares through the auspices of a broker in Canada."

British Firms Helped Batter Sterling

LONDON (AP) — Evidence that is beginning to emerge suggests British companies played an important role in the recent run that drove down the value of the pound.

Until now, market sources here have largely blamed the oil-producing countries and other foreigners with large holdings of sterling for driving the pound down to a record low.

These foreign interests are known to have converted hundreds of millions of pounds to other currencies in the last year because they lost confidence in the British economy.

It now appears that some major British companies also lost confidence and joined significantly in the pressure on the pound, particularly from May on.

These firms were acting in their own corporate interests, protecting profits, but th eeffect of their actions was to help drive the pound down further.

One of the firms allegedly involved was the giant state-run British Steel Corp. The Guardian says this nationalized industry helped push down the pound from the end of April.

The timing is particularly significant. At the end of April, the pound was down to $1.80. Denis Healey, chancellor of the exchequer, and other leading government spokesmen said the pound was then undervalued. They said inflation was being curbed and foreign trade improving. They asked foreign sterling holders to have confidence that things were getting better.

Yet, says The Guardian account, it was precisely at that moment that British firms begon to lose faith in the pound and helped to push it down to $1.70.

British firms are unable to play the money markets. But big firms with large overseas dealings can affect the market. By paying their bills early in foreign currency or by converting their foreign-currency income late, they can affect the amount of money crossing the market — the supply and demand which determines the rote of the floating pound. In market terms, these are called leads and lags.

The Guardian says British Steel's financial managers decided at the end of April to change policy. They issued a directive, reproduced in the newspaper, saying the conversion of foreign income into sterling should be delayed. British Steel sells exports worth $1.2 billion annually.

Conversion of this kind of income into pounds would have helped drive the rate up. Delay would help press it down.

By bringing in the money later at a lower rate, British Steel would earn more pounds. So a delay order would be issued only on the expectation that the pound would fall and that this might be profitable for the company.

"The British Steel Corp. contributed to the recent rapid drop in the value of the pound," The Guardian says.

A British Steel spokesman said in response to the newspaper's account that the company is flexible in its "approach to the present financial situation" and acts "to minimize any adverse affects on the corporation."

Other evidence also suggests that British firms have contributed to the run on the pound, although individual companies are not identified. The signposts are:

—An official report by Britain's major clearing banks said loans to the private sector rose by more than $300 million in the four weeks ending May 19, but that there were few signs of any investment demand. The report said the loans may be "due to changes in the pattern of foreign-exchange paymtnts associated with the weakness of sterling." In other words, companies were delaying conversion of their foreign earnings until the pound went down and covered their sterling needs by borrowing at home.

—Informed financial sources estimate that net capital outflow from Britain was more than $1 billion each in March and April but less than $100 million in May. The March and April figures are consistent with foreigners pulling money out of Britain. The May figure is not, suggesting other reasons were responsible for the pound's drop in May, such as British firms using leads and lags.

—Official figures from the Bank of England's report for the first quarter of 1976 showed that the oil-exporting countries held their investments in Britain steady during the period after reducing them last year.

In short, said the central bank, there was less pressure on sterling from the oil producers in the first quarter than there had been in 1975.

Chopper Business Flying

Changes in government policies on resource development give rise to some optimism in the helicopter operating industry, the annual meeting of Okanagan Helicopters Ltd. was told by John Pitts, chairman and president.

He told shareholders that despite the slowdown in general economic activity in Canada, Okanagan this year should show activity about the same as in 1975.

Recorded revenues of $32,388,000 and profit of $1,488,000 were recorded by Okanagan and its subsidiaries — Canada's largest helicopter company — in the year ended Jan. 31, 1976.

Pitts said that first quarter results this year show a modest increase in revenue compared to a year ago but that there is a decided improvement in operating costs. He gave no figures.

New federal regulations affecting oil exploration in frontier areas and improved mining activity in B.C. are two of the brighter spots.

He said that a federal outline of proposed land regulations in Canadian frontier areas which was tabled in parliament in April more or less define terms under which oil companies will operate.

"Even though the regulations may not be ideal, they do indicate a real concern of the federal government about Canada's diminishing oil reserves.

'We feel guarded optimism that if the present regulations will not get exploration going at an adequate rate, there will be modifications to further encourage exploration."

He said it could result in greatly increased helicopter activity in the Mackenzie area of the Northwest Territories where exploration has been declining in recent years.

There has been a noticeable improvement in the mining activities in B.C., he said.

Cape Bretoners Sing Their Way Into Chinese Hearts . . .

By ROSS H. MUNRO
Special to the Times

PEKING — Even though they weren't allowed to sing about God, love or booze, a group of singing Canadian coal miners from Cape Breton Friday completed one of the most successful people-to-people exchanges ever between China and The Men of the Deeps, as they call themselves, sang their way through the coal-mining towns of China's northeast, singing not only in halls but on the streets, in hotel lobbies and at the mines they visited.

The 26 singers visited workers and peasants in their homes and went down into the pits to meet fellow coal miners.

"When you're 2,400 feet below the surface and you shake hands with a miner crouching in this dark tunnel and he grabs both of your hands in greeting, a lump comes in your throat," one member of the group said last night.

They talked enthusiastically about the "royal treatment" they received everywhere they went, but many of them made a point of telling a reporter that they weren't allowed to sing many of their favorite songs.

Musical Director John O'Donnell a music professor at St. Francis Xavier University and the only man in the group who isn't or wasn't a coal miner said Chinese officials laid down the restrictions in a three-hour meeting shortly before the group arrived about two weeks ago.

'They said most people in China are atheists, so we would prefer that you do not sing any of the songs that mention religion or superstition.

That ruled out the miners' memorial hymn and the omen.

"And then they said we do not permit songs which speak of love between a man and a woman. So that ruled out this and this and this and this and this. We have no bawdy songs but you couldn't even sing about a man wanted to come back to his loved one."

At most of the concerts they gave, the lyrics of their songs were translated verse by verse into Chinese.

To emphasize the fact that they all were, or are, working coalminers, the men wore green coveralls and safety helmets equipped with lamps.

KNOW YOUR ZONING
In a nutshell, zoning laws lay out restrictions as to what kind of buildings may be constructed and how they can be used within certain geographic limits. A good community has zoning laws that protect its homeowners. However, they may also put a crimp into future remodelling plans you have in mind.
For example, if the area is zoned for one-family homes, you may not be able to use a part of the house for some special use, such as converting an area for an apartment for a family member or rental or using a part of the house for an office or partly for business. There may be height restrictions or lot-size limitations.
Before buying, you should know what the zoning is, and the geographic limits of residential and business-zoned areas in your locality. It may affect the future value of your property and save you from an unexpected disappointment.

Sounds Like Village Idiot, Says Finley

NEW YORK (AP) — Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's landmark decision, voiding the $3.5-million sale of three Oakland A's players, seems certain to land baseball back into the courtrooms—a playing field where the game has not fared well recently.

"We will be taking it to court Monday," stormed Oakland owner Charles O. Finley, who called Kuhn's decision "very stupid," and said the commissioner "sounds like the village idiot."

Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Baseball Players' Association, said he also might take legal action.

"We're considering it," he said. "Obviously, we're not going to stand still while the powers that be attempt to ruin the careers of three players."

Kuhn said he expected his decision, returning pitchers Vida Blue and Rollie Fingers and outfielder Joe Rudi to the A's, would be tested in court.

"There is a clear-cut possibility of litigation," said Kuhn, looking strained after two days of wrestling with the sales of Blue, to New York Yankees and Fingers and Rudi to Boston Red Sox. "Both New York and Oakland have indicated they would test the decision by litigation."

"We went by the baseball rule book," said Dick O'Connell, general manager of the Red Sox. "How he can go against it is incomprehensible. In the future, when clubs want to make a player deal, who do you contact?"

Publicly, the Yankees had no official comment on Kuhn's decision which the commissioner made under the broad interpretation of his authority to act in the game's best interests as outlined in Article 1, Sec. 4 of the major league agreement.

But Finley, who has tangled with Kuhn repeatedly, had plenty to say.

"You never know what to expect from Bowie Kuhn," snapped the A's' owner. "There have been many, many cash transactions through the years and nothing has ever been questioned about those."

Finley said his lawyers are preparing "right at this moment for legal actions against Kuhn."

The commissioner said he decided to void the deals because of his concern for maintaining public confidence in the integrity of baseball.

"I am concerned over the prospect of affluent clubs such as Boston and New York acquiring for sums as high as $3½ million, players in the prime of their careers," he said. "Inevitably there are all kinds of suspicions when players change hands for such large sums."

The commissioner called his decision "an effort to maintain the equality of competition."

Without Blue, Fingers and Rudi, he said he would be concerned about "the skills of the Oakland ball club and the competitive factor in the game."

Kuhn made his decision after summoning Finley, O'Connell and owner George Steinbrenner and president Gabe Paul of the Yankees to a Thursday hearing because the sale of the three players had "raised some questions."

The effect, Kuhn decided, was a weakening of the fibre of the Oakland team which he could not allow to take place.

Finley, who sold the three stars because of their status as unsigned players, defied the commissioner's ruling and ordered his manager Chuck Tanner to keep them out of uniform Friday night.

Besides Rudi, Fingers and Blue, Finley has been unable to sign Sal Bando, Don Baylor, Bert Campaneris and Gene Tenace.

The A's owner said he would have used the $3.5 million realized from the sales of the three players to rebuild his club this winter. Other unsigned stars who could become free agents then include Bobby Grich of Baltimore, and Carlton Fisk, Fred Lynn and Rick Burleson of Boston.

If those players do not sign by season's end or if some accommodation is not reached between the owners and the players' association, they would become free agents under the current interpretation of baseball's reserve clause. It was that interpretation, handed down by an impartial arbitrator and upheld by two federal courts, that allowed pitcher Andy Messersmith to become a free agent after last season.

In his defence of the sales, Finley cited precedent. Such Hall of Famers as Babe Ruth, Joe Cronin and Dizzy Dean were sold for cash. When the A's played in Philadelphia, owner Connie Mack broke up two championship teams with a rash of sales of such stars as Al Simmons, Mickey Cochrane, Eddie Collins, Chief Bender, Eddie Plank and Lefty Grove.

Dorothy's Confidence Rewarded with a Title

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Dorothy DeGirolamo expresses great respect for Dale Shaw's golf talents but the confidence in her own ability had its reward Friday.

The Gorge Vale member defeated Miss Shaw, Canada's top-ranked woman golfer in 1975, 3 and 2 Friday at Uplands to capture the Victoria women's championship for a second straight year.

The result may have surprised some, but not the red-haired school board employee.

"There's no doubt in my mind who is the better golfer," Dorothy said in a tribute to her rival, "but they say No. 2 tries harder . . ."

The "trying," not to mention a superb short-iron game, resulted in a rare match-play defeat for Dale. The Glen Meadows golfer hasn't lost to a Vancouver Island rival since before 1970, when she won the first of five straight city championships.

Their playoff Friday was their first meeting in match-play competition.

"I wouldn't have played if I thought I couldn't win," said Mrs. DeGirolamo, quietly tipping some of her confidence. "I know I'm not going to hit the ball as far as Dale. I made up my mind not to watch Dale and just play the course instead."

Intent but relaxed, Dorothy conceded Dale the extra yards off the tee but found equalization with her approach game. It resulted in an excellent final.

Match-play scoring credited Mrs. DeGirolamo with a one-over-par figure for the 16 holes played. Miss Shaw was seven over but two holes accounted for the greatest discrepancy in their stroke totals.

Their was a five-stroke difference in their totals on the 10th and match-ending 16th holes. Dorothy birdied both par-four holes while her rival took a six and five, respectively, while encountering her greatest grief.

TENTH FLIGHT—Irene Fleming (GV) 5 and 3 over Estelle Ingram (CH).

NINTH FLIGHT—Lyn Williams (V) 2 up over Emily Medland (RC).

EIGHTH FLIGHT—Kathleen Craig (RC) 2 and 1 over Flora Kirker (GV).

SEVENTH FLIGHT—Nora O'Connell (GV) on the 19th over Eileen Mann (CH).

SIXTH FLIGHT—Holly Heiler (CH) 3 and 2 over Irene Hawksworth (SSI).

FIFTH FLIGHT—Joyce Woodruff (GM) 2 up over Ann Gillespie (GM).

FOURTH FLIGHT—Verle McKeown (GV) 3 and 2 over Betty Forgie (V).

THIRD FLIGHT—Janey Gudewill (V) 6 and 4 over Thelma Bydal (RC).

SECOND FLIGHT — Flo MacIntyre (GV) 5 and 4 over Barbara Sutherland-Brown (V).

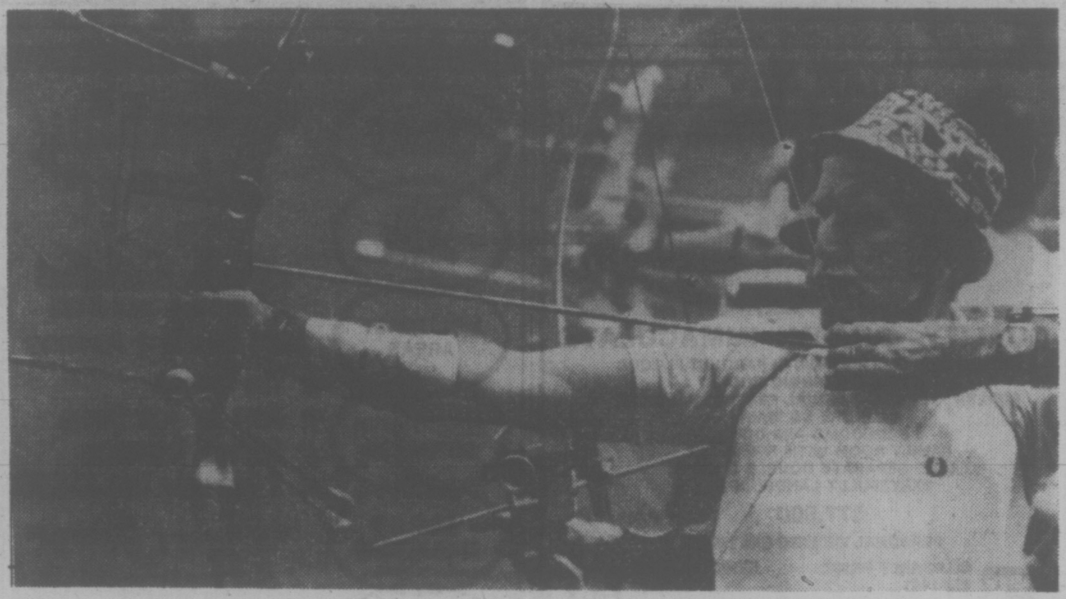
FIRST FLIGHT—Juanita Turner (GV) 2 and 1 over Betty Phillips (U).

CONSOLATION FLIGHT—Heather Stewart (U) 1 up over Shirley Naysmith (GV).

Their match was all square after nine, both making the turn with two-over-par 39s.

In the over-all analysis, the difference was in their short games. On another day, Miss Shaw's approaches might have been adequate. They weren't Friday because of Mrs. DeGirolamo's superb play.

The signs were posted early in the match. Dorothy caught sand traps on three of the first four holes, but came out of the bunkers in great style on two of the holes. She won one and halved the other with her excellent recoveries.



TAKING AIM at titles as Canadian archery championships and Olympic team trials started today at St. Michael's University School is Calgary ace Ted Gamble, who formerly competed in England. Archers will be firing at St. Michael's through Wednesday, with events starting at 9 a.m. each day.

A Chicken No Longer

DULUTH, Ga. (AP) — John Mahaffey got his dander up when a fellow golfing pro told him he was "chicken."

"I was boiling mad at first — then I said maybe the guy is right," said the Texan, who moved into the halfway lead of the United States Open on Friday with a 70-68—138.

"I started getting more aggressive, going for the pins more and not leaving so many putts short. I am more determined than ever to win this tournament. I can't forget that I had it in my hands and let it slip away."

Mahaffey, 28, tied for the Open a year ago and then lost in an 18-hole playoff to Lou Graham.

On Friday, he attacked the 7,015-yard, par-70 Atlanta Athletic Club course with all his vigor and seized the lead with a near-perfect round that included four birdies and two bogeys.

As the balloon burst for 21-year-old amateur Mike Reid, whose 67 gave him a three-stroke lead after the first round, Al Geiberger moved into second place behind Mahaffey with 70-69, followed by Ben Crenshaw and Jerry Pate, plus the 10-year pro, Rod Funseth, all tied at 140.

There was a cluster tied at 142, including Hubert Green, J. C. Snead, Lyn Lott, Mike Morley and Butch Baird, while most of the game's stars were strung out in the rear.

The perennial man to beat, Jack Nicklaus, reeled off 18 consecutive pars for a 70 and, coupled with Thursday's birdieless round of 74, challenged from six shots back at 144.

Asked the last time he played two rouunds without a single birdie, Nicklaus said: "I think it was when I was 10."

Reid took triple bogeys on the ninth and 18th holes in shooting an 81, and suddenly discovered fame is fleeting.

Mahaffey said his current spurt was sparked by two events that cut deeply into his pride—the playoff in the 1975 Open and the charge that he was "chicken."

"About a month ago, Don January and I were returning from a pro-am at Laurel Valley in Ligonier, Pa.," Mahaffey said. "We were chatting about golf and Don said to me, 'Why are you so chicken? Anybody who can hit the ball as well as you should always go for the pin.'

"I was upset at first. Then I said to myself, 'January has been around a long time. He stayed out two years and came back and started winning. He must know what he's talking about.'"

Mahaffey's restructured attitude was reflected in his excellent round Friday which saw him splitting the fairways with his drives and flying his approaches at the pins despite their tricky locations.

His birdies came on a 10-foot putt at the second, 3½ at the ninth, two putts on the par-five 12th and a 40-footer at the nightmarish 15th. He missed short putts on each of the last three holes, three-putting No. 18 for a bogey One of the misses was from 1½ feet.

Scores of 151 and better survived the cutoff of low 60 and ties. The biggest casualty was two-time winner Bill Casper, now a rancher in Utah.

Indies Jolted

LONDON (Reuter) — Fortunes swung dramatically England's way on the second day of the second cricket test at Lord's.

England extended their first innings score to 250 and, thanks to John Snow and Derek Underwood, bowled the West Indies out for 182.

At the close England were 27 for no wicket in their second innings, an overall lead of 95.

England, struggling at 197 for eight overnight, added a fighting 53 for the last two wickets. Hero of the hour was spinner Underwood who hit a beligerent 31, defying the speed of Andy Roberts and Michael Holding.

West Indies quickly lost the wicket of Roy Fredericks, caught by Snow off Chris Old for nought. Larry Gomes and Alvin Kallicharran soon followed, leaving Clive Lloyd's men at 40 for three shortly after lunch.

Lloyd and Gordon Greenidge put West Indies back in the match with a sparkling fourth wicket partnership of 99 but, just when they seemed set, Snow and Underwood struck back to demolish the innings.

CASTLE, HARVEYS TRIUMPH

Harvey's Sporting Goods and Castle Properties both benefitted from solid pitching performances and strong attacks to score easy softball victories Friday.

Brian Vanderkratch allowed only one hit — Greg Sam's sixth-inning single — and his teammates supplied hits as Harveys blanked Victoria Chiefs 7-0 in a Sidney Men's League game at Sanscha Park.

Mickey Nunn belted a two-run homer for Harveys, who moved back into a tie for first place and face co-leading Seaboard Properties Sunday.

Bob Dalziel allowed only three hits to spark Castle Properties to an 8-1 triumph over Esquimalt Juveniles in a Heywood Men's League encounter.

The Stuffy McGinnis League, meanwhile, launched play this morning in a nine-team double-loss tournament at Central Park. The event winds up Sunday.

New Owners For Blades

SASKATOON (CP) — Saskatoon Blades of the Western Canada Hockey League were sold Friday to a three-man group which includes Jack McLeod, who has been the general manager and coach of the club for the last six years.

McLeod's partners include Saskatoon businessmen Nathan Brodsky, the majority shareholder, and Joe Reich. The club was bought from Jim Piggott, who has been involved in the ownership of a junior club in Saskatoon for almost 20 years.

McLeod will retain his post as coach and general manager and also is the team president and governor to the league.

Four Tied for Lead

PLYMOUTH, Ind. (AP) — Judy Rankin and three others tied for the lead with three-under par 69's in Friday's rain-delayed first round of a $50,000 Ladies' Professional Golf Association tournament.

Rankin was tied with Sally Little, Kathy Martin and Sylvia Bertolaccini after the first 18 holes. Tournament directors at the Plymouth Country Club said the first round would be resumed this morning prior to the second round.

Twenty-seven golfers completed the 18 holes before rain halted play.

Knudson, Norman Close to Leaders

MOUNT HOPE, Ont. (CP) — Greg Pidlaski and Leon DeCaire, both from Toronto's Uplands Golf Club, shot course-record five-under-par 66s Friday to share the first-round lead in the Ontario Open championship.

DeCaire, 34-year-old Uplands head pro, was in the clubhouse shortly after lunch with his 66 that beat the previous mark of 67 on the 6587-yard Mount Hope Golf and Country Club course.

Almost three hours later, Pidlaski rolled in with his 66 and a share of the lead in this $20,000 tournament.

Tour veterans George Knudson of Toronto and Moe Norman of Gilford, Ont., were among four golfers one stroke behind the leaders. Also in with 67s were amateur Greg Patterson of the host Mount Hope club and Greg Wagstaff of Toronto.

John Morgan of Victoria headed a list of three B.C. golfers with a 71 while Dave Barr of Kelowna carded a 74 and Terry Wiens of Vancouver a 78.

Judge Reserves Verdict

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Judgement was reserved Friday in the trial of leftwinger Archie Henderson of Victoria Cougars of the Western Canada Hockey League.

Following summations in county-court, Judge Patrick Dohm reserved decision to June 30.

Henderson is charged with assault causing bodily harm after a player with the Kamloops Chiefs, Larry Lestander, was struck in the face and injured in a game here Jan. 25.

Counsel for Henderson argued that Henderson's action was not deliberate, but only a reflex action. He attached inconsistencies in the testimony of witnesses and said it was interesting the referee had assessed Henderson only a two-minute penalty.

He also said violence is normal in hockey and the injury to Lestander was an isolated but normal incident. He added that the public encourages violence in hockey and is fascinated by it.

The crown described the incident as a malicious, unprovoked attack, claiming it did not take place in the heat of the moment.

Deadline Extended In Times Tourney

Bad weather just after the start of the third annual Victoria Times Public Parks Tennis Tournament disrupted quite a few matches and so we have been forced to extend the first-round deadline.

All first-round matches were to have been completed and the results back in to the Times newsroom by 5 p.m. Friday. But, as there are still quite a lot of results to come in, particularly in the men's singles event, we are giving those who have not played yet until 5 p.m. next Wednesday. In matches not reported by then, both players will be disqualified from the tournament.

Those players who have dodged the rain showers and got through their matches seem to be enjoying the tourney, sponsored this year by the Times, Island Indoor Tennis and by the Vancouver Island Lawn Tennis Association.

There have already been many close matches, quite a few of them going to a tie-breaker at 9-8.

In a classic mixed doubles game, the four "A"s did battle — with Alan Graves and Anne Churchill just nipping Alan Whitely and Ann Sutherland, 6-4, 4-6, 6-4.

Another couple sent the result card in with a little note on the bottom saying "We really enjoyed playing in this tournament" — even though they lost 9-3!

Cards have been sent out to those players who have advanced and the deadlines for second-round matches vary between June 29 and July 9.

Results recieved so far:

Burrards Closing In On Leading Shamrocks

NANAIMO — A Western Lacrosse Association game had some stalling moments Friday but it didn't bother Vancouver as the second-place Burrards continued their climb towards first by defeating Nanaimo Timbermen 15-12 before 1,000 fans.

Vancouver now trails Victoria Shamrocks by four points.

Held up for an hour by the late arrival of the Vancouver team, the game was delayed again in the second period when Vancouver goalkeeper Pat Safaniuk was injured stopping a hard shot by Jim Lynch. Preliminary examination indicated the possibility of a broken or cracked rib.

Safaniuk's injury turned out to be a costly development for the Timbermen, who were only 8-9 at the end of the second period and had their third-period drive blunted by the fine goalkeeping of replacement Dave Evans, who blocked 14 of 18 last-period shots.

Pat Differ of Burrards and Brian Evans of Timbermen shared scoring honors, each with five points — Differ scoring three times and Evans twice.

Bob Salt also had three goals for Burrards, who got two goals from Doug Hayes and Bill Rawson and single goals from Rick Orner, Bob Holmes, Ward Sanderson, Brian Davidson and Dick Crompton.

Lynch, who also had two assists, Rick Baker and Bob Wasson all scored twice for Timbermen. Phil Ashbee, Bill Kirkland, Bob Avender and Wayne Sutherland each scored once.

FIRST CHAMP FOR GERMANY IN 44 YEARS

WEST BERLIN (Reuter) — Ekkhard Dagge brought the first world boxing title to Germany in 44 years here Friday night when he beat World Boxing Council WBC light middleweight champion Elisha O Bed in the 10th round of their scheduled 15-round bout.

Dagge held on grimly in the early part of the fight and then saw O Bed turn on his heel and walk to his corner in surrender in the middle of the 10th round.

The last world title came to Germany in 1932 when Max Schmeling defeated heavyweight champion Jack Sharkey.

Mixed Rinks Sought

Only two more entries are needed to fill out the 40-rink draw in the 16th annual summer mixed bonspiel starting Thursday at Esquimalt Curling Club.

Gary Merrit's Duncan rink is back to try to retain the title in the four-event competition. The finals will be played on Sunday (June 27).

Following are the first draws for all rinks entered:

THURSDAY

6 p.m. Ernie Reynolds (Vic.) vs. Laurie Thompson (Play.); Keith Hamel (Esq.) vs. Ferd Pilon (Play.); George Becker (Vic.) vs. Gar Taylor (Vic.); Gavin Smart (Esq.) vs. H. L. Walker (esq.); Jack Crowther (Vic.) vs. Kelly Horrigan (Esq.); Bert Longhurst (Vic. vs. Joe Iannarelli (Esq.).

8:15 p.m. — Bob Cummings (Vic.) vs. Jim Lang (Esq.); Peter Jonsson (Vic.) vs. Bill Shearing (Esq.); Bob West (Vic.) vs. Jack Fyfe (Esq.); Derrell Sears (Esq.) vs. Stu Mould (Play.); Len Becker (Racq.) vs. Bob Irvine (Oak Bay); Gary Merrit (Duncan) vs. Don Sutton (UVic.).

10:30 p.m. — Len Stewart (Esq.) vs. Doug Benedict (Vic); Neil Lehna (Vic.) vs. David Hunt (Oak Bay); Kelly Oulton (Vic.) vs. Howie Valleau (Duncan); Torrey Gillott (Esq.) vs. Sandy Bull (Esq.); Dave Jefferson (Vic.) vs. Stu Palfrey (Play.).

FRIDAY

5:15 p.m.—John Best (Burnaby) vs. James Gislason (Pt. Alberni); John Wishlow (Van.) vs. Ray Guerton (Seattle).

Job for Boileau

QUEBEC (CP) — Marc Boileau, fired during the 1975-76 season as coach of Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League, was hired Friday to coach Quebec Nordiques of the World Hockey Association.

White-water river ride is fine family sport

By ED RUMILL

FOUNTAIN HILLS, Arizona (CMS) — Maintaining a disciplined calm, we reacted not at all when a neighbor suggested we join him and his wife on a white-water ride down the Colorado River.

"It's a lot of fun," he assured us. "It's one of the best family sports I've ever known. The four of us have done it several times and it's what we think of first when I get a chance to have a few days off."

A family sport? Could he be talking about what we had recently seen in a television special — life-jacketed people, protected by oil-skin coats and hats, seeming to hold desperately to ropes inside a big life raft, their colorful life jackets glistening with splashing water.

White-water rafting on Idaho's Salmon River

This is what he and his wife and two children did for a pastime; this is what he wanted us to do?

"Shooting rapids?" my neighbor said, repeating my question. "Well, I think your picture is a bit distorted. There's an occasional stretch of white water, but not the sort of rapids I think you're referring to. I've seen 7-year-olds and 77-year-olds making the trip and I'm not sure which had the most fun."

River running, it turns out, actually is a popular family sport in this part of the country and getting more popular by the day.

Families not only take boat and rubber raft trips down most of the major rivers of the West and Southwest, they even do it on extended vacations.

Some folks tackle the Colorado River in a day, while others take a week or more, camping along the way, exploring canyons, side rivers and swimming holes.

The picturesque Colorado winds through the magnificent Grand Canyon and is the most publicized and perhaps most challenging river in this part of the United States.

But Oregon's Rogue River, and Utah's Yampa and Green, are gaining in popularity. Further north are British Columbia's Fraser and Chilcotin Rivers. Idaho's Salmon also lures both weekend and vacationing river runners.

Of course, there's a lot more to it, if you are doing it right, than putting a craft into the river and taking off. Beginners, above all, should start out by hiring a guide.

And out here when you want an experienced hand to show you the way — to get you outfitted properly and make all the arrangements :— you get in touch with the American River Touring Association based in Oakland, California.

The founder and president is Lou Elliott and he now has his son, Bob, working with him full-time.

Elliott pointed out that boats are seldom used any more.

"It didn't take us long to find out that rubber rafts are much safer," he explained. "After all, a wooden boat can hit a rock and break up. A raft just bounces off and keeps right on going."

River runners wear all sorts of clothing, but Elliott recommends loose-fitting jeans, tennis shoes, long-sleeve shirts and a hat for shade.

"The idea is to be comfortable," Elliott said. "But of course quick-drying clothes make more sense because you can't help getting wet."

Some people who sign up for the Colorado River run, however, are disappointed.

"They feel shortchanged because they expected more thrills on the rapids," he continued. "You encounter white water only every five or 10 miles on the Colorado, and even then it's relatively tame. Where we guide our parties, no rafts ever tip over. In fact, it's almost impossiblee to tip a large raft.

"What families seem to enjoy now more than anything else are the frequent stops along the way for camping, exploring, cookouts, picture taking and the like."

The Elliotts can arrange trips on any navigable river in the West, or they will take you down the Amazon. A lot depends, of course, on how much you want to spend.

For example, a two-week excursion on the Colorado, through the Grand Canyon, runs better than $550. A one-day trip costs under $50. An international trip could cost you $750 or $1,600, but usually includes air fare and meals. The guides are all accomplished outdoor cooks.

RELAXING FRIENDLY ATMOSPHERE — GOLF

PARIS — Rumors notwithstanding, it won't be necessary to hock the Peugeot to obtain a reasonable hotel room in Paris this summer.

Small nests of comfort await the traveler throughout the city at Paris' oft-time charming little hotels. They are found from Montmartre to Montparnasse and from St.-Germain to the Etoile.

Granted, they might not match the snobbery of the George V or the Ritz, but what's missing in elegance will be made up in price.

And prices, if you're not careful, will be shocking this summer of '76. Take, for example, the fussy Meurice, where rates range from $70 to $78 a day single and $100 to $110 a day double.

Not even the knowledge that this venerable landmark faces the Rue de Riovoli makes up for fact that a guest could blow an entire week's hotel budget in little more than a night.

To avoid such a catastrophe, one need stroll only a couple of blocks beyond the Meurice to run smack into Hotel des Tuileries—still a bargain on the Rue St. Hyacinthe. Here the weary traveler will discover peace, comfort and a private bath for roughly $32 a day double or $26 single.

A historical landmark of 18-century origin, Hotel des Tuileries is only moments away from the Opera, the Louvre, Place Vendome and Place de la Concorde.

If prices at the Tuileries fail to fit the budget, the Hotel Prince Albert directly across the street at No. 5 Rue St. Hyacinthe is cheaper.

Although tacky, its rates are right, with singles up for grabs at $11 to $23 a night and doubles at $13 to $25, including taxes and service.

It should be noted that only the higher-priced rooms are equipped with private baths.

One of the true gems of Paris is found dead centre of the Seine, the Hotel de Lutece at 65 Rue St. Louis-en-L'Ile (Paris 75,004).

Its proprietor, young M. Roland Buffat, spent a small fortune renovating this former private home, transforming it into a charming 23-room shelter for the discriminating guest.

When I looked in, a huge basket of daisies stood by the door and a welcome glow shone from the fireplace.

Only three minutes by foot from Notre Dame, Hotel de Lutece lets rooms for about $35 a night double, taxes and service included. The continental breakfast delivered to the room each morning will cost the guest an extra $1.50.

Just next door the same owner has restored another old home, providing additional rooms for about $10 a night single (the W.C. is down the hall) to $20 for a twin with private bath.

This is a quiet residential neighborhood with homes at least 200 years old. No Metro rumbles beneath the foundations and nights are peacefully still.

Besides Notre Dame, the Pantheon is on view, and guests may buy all manner of sweets at a patisserie directly across the street.

Rue St. Louis-en-L'Ile is lined with small shops that dispense meats, cheeses, fruits and flowers. It is a breath of old Paris set in the Seine.

Close by on the Left Bank, Hotel Le Colbert is a rare discovery at 7 Rue de l'Hotel Colbert. In the heart of old Paris, it stands in the shadow of Notre Dame.

Indeed, windows on the north side of the building frame the Gothic spires of the famed cathedral. For such atmosphere, the management asks $35 a day for a double.

Hotel Le Colbert rises in the heart of the Latin Quarter, with Blvd. St. Michel and Blvd. St. Germain only steps away.

Were I asked to name the slickest small hotel in all of Paris, though, my vote would have to go to the charming, 45-room Hotel de l'Abbaye at 10 Rue Casette (Paris 75,006).

Only a couple of minutes off Blvd. St. Germain, Hotel de l'Abbaye is appropriately named in honor of the ancient abbey it occupies.

Pots ablaze with geraniums line the courtyard entrance and guests take their morning coffee in the peaceful winter garden. Just around the corner visitors will find the Church of St. Germain and that famed sidewalk cafe, Deux Maggots.

Rates at Hotel de l'Abbaye range from $27.50 single to $33 double. (Note: Rooms 12, 22 and 32 all face the garden with its musical fountain and ivy-covered walls.)

One of the best buys remaining in Paris is Hotel du Senat at 22 Rue St. Sulpice (Paris 75,006). This is also on the Left Bank and only a short stroll from Deux Maggots.

At du Senat, rooms are available for as little as $11 single and $12 double, breakfast included. The Ritz it isn't, but you'll find it cheery in a faded sort of way. Ask for David. He's been registering guests for the 15 years I've known about the place.

Just up the block is that other old standby, Hotel Scandinavia at 27 Rue de Tournon, which is only a few brief steps from the gates of Luxembourg Palace.

Its 22 rooms occupy five floors and guests should be forewarned that there is no lift.

Rates for a room with bath in this formerly private 17th-century mansion run $26 double. (Note: Ask for a room with four-poster beds.)

In this neighborhood of inexpensive hotels, the Grand Hotel des Principantes is another excellent choice at 42-44 Rue de Vaugirrard. It's 29 rooms are priced from $27 a day single and $29 double, complete with stall shower and continental breakfast.

One of my all-time favorites remains the Hotel St. Simon, a cluster of 36 rooms on Rue St. Simon just off Blvd. St. Germain. The neighborhood dates from the Napoleonic era and the furniture is best described as early Goodwill. But while the rugs are a bit bare here and there, still it exudes both warmth and charm.

What really counts, after all, is that the plumbing works, the proprietress is friendly and the prices are right, about $21 for a single or double with bath. If the bath isn't important, other rooms can be occupied for as little as $10 a day.

Hotel St. Simon faces a quiet street only a three-minute walk from the nearest Metro station in a neighborhood that's decidedly Left Bank — about a mile west of St. Germain des Prs.

My room, No. 12, is a third floor walkup facing Rue St. Simon with a clean sweep of the rooftops of Paris.

I flung open the window wide so Paris is perfectly framed in the first light of dawn. Could one ask for more, even at the Crillon? I think not.

Even Renoir would be moved by the scene.

Barbados seeks identity

By EDWARD NEILAN

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (CNS) — The book on Barbados is that it is an island nation still seeking identity in the Caribbean sun.

Barbados rarely makes the front page. Most of the international mention that Barbados receives is in travel agency and airline brochures and on the travel pages of newspapers.

For the 250,000 Barbadians (also called "Bajans") who live on this pear-shaped island, the feeling is that there must be something more than tourism and sugar as sources of earning a living.

Part of the frustration stems from the startlingly high literacy rate — 98 per cent. With education comes rising expectations.

For most Barbadians opportunity for upward mobility is limited on this easternmost Caribbean island, which measures 21 miles by 14 miles at its widest point.

Some of the frustrations, inevitably, are taken out on tourists who send a powerful amount of tourist green into Barbados' coffers.

English, of course, is the language here, but it is often heard spoken with an intriguing (to the visitor) Barbadian patois. Language, however, is not the only tie to England. Barbados' National Assembly dates from 1639 and the present political, judicial and administrative systems are closely modeled on the British system of government.

The island is noted for its political stability and maturity and for the fact that a gradual and peaceful constitutional evolution toward self-government has been maintained during the last 300 years.

Freiburg still market place

By MARGARET NESS

FREIBURG, West Germany (CP) — The Zahringen dukes spent much of their lives founding strategically placed fortresses in central Europe. They chose so wisely that cities and towns have grown up around their castle-forts.

Two of the most famous are in Switzerland, the capital city of Berne and, Basel, famous for its trade fairs. Less known is the charming medieval city of Freiburg, with a population of 160,000, between the mountains of Germany's Black Forest and the Vosges.

The original Zahringen castle was built in 1091 on the Schlossberg (castle mountain) to control a junction of two trade routes. It can be reached by a cable railway for a panoramic view of the red-roofed city.

Thirty years later, Duke Konrad von Zahringen and his brother Berthold III founded a town in the valley as a trading centre.

Today Freiburg is still a market place. Early every weekday morning farmers and market women bring in produce and flowers and set up stalls on the small square around the magnificent Gothic cathedral, flanked by imposing medieval buildings and a fountain with a gilded St. George, the city's patron saint.

Freiburg is worth a full day to walk through the old city core and drive or take a local bus up the residential wooded hillside. Or it can be used as a base for a few days' exploration of other Black Forest centres.

Make reservations well in advance to stay at the Rappen Hotel, a modernized old inn on the cathedral square. After an early breakfast, inspect the old buildings on the square.

The ornate and arcaded red sandstone merchants' hall has two lovely oriels. Across its Renaissance facade are statues of four archdukes from the period when Freiburg was ruled by Austria.

The sandstone Cathedral of Our Dear Lady is one of the most beautiful in Europe with its 114-metre-high tower and lacy spire. It is uniquely pure Gothic.

Few medieval communities could afford to complete their cathedrals in less than five or six centuries and their architectural styles incorporate Romanesque, Renaissance or Baroque features. But Freiburg, wealthy from its silver and lead mines, completed its edifice in a little over two centuries while Gothic style remained pre-eminent.

Have lunch at the Baren (Bear) Hotel, possibly the oldest in Germany, established in 1120. Its interior is as delightful as its fanciful orange-and-grey painted facade with a series of coats-of-arms.

The white-and beige town hall has an attractive Renaissance facade, oriels and an inside courtyard where comedies are presented in summer.

The university is famous, with 132 schools. The tower of the main building is four-tiered, like a wedding cake.

Canada's travel bill placed at $3 billion

TORONTO (CP) — Canadians spent almost $3 billion last year on travel, an increase of 22 per cent over the year before, and 59 per cent of the population took vacation trips, says a report by Traveldata International of Toronto for the federal office of tourism.

Expenditures in Canada were up 20 per cent compared with a 23-per-cent increase in spending by Canadians vacationing in the United States and a three-per-cent increase in other countries.

Air travel was down five per cent over the year before but that method of transportation was used in one out of four vacations. Automobiles were used in 63 per cent of vacation trips, up from 56 per cent in 1974.

Train and bus travel accounted for about eight per cent of vacation trips.

Daily spending by what the report called the average Canadian vacation party was $30 in Canada, $49 in the United States and $71 in all other countries.

Canada's share of the Canadian travel market remained unchanged fom the previous year at 71 per cent, with Nova Scotia making the most significant gain as a destination.

If last year's summer holiday drove you crazy you'll love the Islands

INTERVAC invites you to become an "islander". This summer get away from over-crowded highways, camp grounds and cities. And take advantage of Intervac's off-season rates on the islands of Hawaii. Add up what last year's summer holiday cost you in: driving time, gas, bad weather, motels, and most of all, peace of mind. Then compare it to a relaxing, carefree holiday in the islands. Choose your favourite island and leave all the details to us.

The Hawaiian Islands
Discover Hawaiian summers; they're gorgeous. With gentle trade winds and temperatures in the 80's, you'll find Hawaii's summer weather ideal for getting a beautiful tan. And you'll find each island has its own special appeal, whether it be the lively night-life of Oahu, the lush tropical beaches of Kauai or the history of old Hawaii at Maui's whaling village of Lahaina.

Travel Tips by Stan Delaplane

Haiti offers watered-down voodoo ceremony version

By STAN DELAPLANE

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Richard Burton came down here to get one of his periodic divorces from Liz Taylor. But I don't think this will set off a rush of splitting couples.

It's NOT as easy as the former Mexican border divorces. Quite a bit of paper work needed from the U.S. Is a Haiti divorce good in the U.S.? Only been asked once. The New York State judge said "yes." (That's only ONE judge.)

American lawyers think a Haiti divorce, followed by remarriage AND children by both marriages, could be sticky. Who gets the goodies when papa passes? That Haiti divorce better be rock-solid, or children by No. 2 could be illegitimate. Not entitled to inherit. Have a nice day!)

If YOUR situation is uncomplicated, you DO get the divorce in 24 hours. Out of New York — (American Air direct three-and-a-half hours) — divorce, air fare and a few days to pick up a suntan will go about $650.

Write Office National du Tourisme in Port-au-Prince. They'll tell you about it and send you a list of hotels. (Hotel prices are VERY good here.) Air mail is 31 cents from U.S. to Haiti.

"Our cruise ship will be in Port - au - Prince overnight. Where do we go? How do we dress?"

There's a half dozen first-class hotels. They split the show — so you find out which hotel is having the show THAT night. Dress is tropical light and informal. Men wear jackets and ties.

"Friends of ours told us it's possible to see a voodoo ceremony . . ."

There's a watered-down version. It costs $3 and it's something like attending afternoon services at your local church.

Voodoo is not just sticking pins in dolls. It's a religion that comes from early French Catholic priests and out of slave Africa.

Mostly a little drumming and chanting. Everybody dressed up. Just like church on Sunday back home.

"Is this safe country? I mean to walk around on the streets? Or is there purse-snatching? Pickpockets?"

People I met say it's absolutely safe. Tell stories of dropping a $5 bill in the airport and having the porter run after them to return it. So many things like this, I don't think they were painting me the beautiful picture. I think it's probably just so.

Taxi driver told me: "Sure, you walk down streets here anytime at night. Three o'clock in the morning, you like. Somebody see you, HE probably gonna run like hell. He think you a zombie! Ha, ha, ha."

(A zombie is a dead person, raised by voodoo magic. The zombie must work for his master all night. At daylight he is returned to the grave. No vacation. No union. No minumum wage.)

"What about shopping?"

We all buy mahogany carving. Salad bowls. Plates. African masks. Your taxi driver is a detemined steerer. Probably speaks some English. Like every hackie in the wide world, he's steering you where he gets the best commission.

That doesn't mean a ripoff necessarily. Maybe it's good. But locals say the best worked wood and best priced is at the Salvation Army where they have a workshop for handicapped.

Whatever wood you buy in the shops, it may have termite eggs. As soon as you get home, put it in the freezer for 24 hours. That discourages them until Judgment Day.

"Water safe? Ice in drinks OK? Any food to be avoided?"

They tell me not to drink tap water here. There's bottled water in your room. Big hotel table water is purified. So is the ice — I hope. Anyway, I use ice and water everywhere in the tropics if it's in a big hotel or restaurant. Fruit and tomatoes are TOPS in this country. I wouldn't eat them off street stands. But I give them a big vote of confidence every day in our dining room.

China Clipper restored as attraction

LONDON (CP) — The China Clippers were all composite ships and some, in their day, could claim to be the fastest ships in the world.

One of these, the Cutty Sark, has been restored to her original condition and is open to inspection berthed in dry dock at Greenwich.

She was built by Scott and Linton and Denny Bros. and launched in 1869.

Hays Resigns Committee Post

WASHINGTON (WP) — Rep. Wayne Hays (Dem.-Ohio) Friday bowed to pressures generated by his sex-payroll scandal and resigned as chairman of the house administration committee which he had used to become a major power in the House.

The departure of Hays is expected to lead quickly to dilution of the committee's power to hand out unlimited staff allowances and other fringe benefits to members and tightened control over the handling of house accounts.

Majority leader Thomas O'Neill (Dem.-Mass.), said, "There is no question that the committee has too much power" and promised the house will take some action to change it before going on recess next weekend. Rep. Frank Thompson (Dem.-N.J.), longtime Hays adversary, is expected to replace him as committee chairman next Wednesday and said he favors "a considerable number of immediate reforms".

A move also began Friday to remove Hays as chairman of a House international relations subcommittee which handles the state department's annual authorization bill. That bill passed the house Friday as Hays remained hospitalized in Ohio from an overdose of sleeping pills nine days ago.

Rep. Michael Harrington (Dem.-Mass.) asked committee chairman Thomas Morgan (Dem.-Pa.) to call a caucus of all committee Democrats to oust Hays as subcommittee chairman until charges against him are resolved.

Wash. Coast Salmon Ban

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A federal judge again has ordered the State of Washington to ban commercial salmon fishing off its coast until July 1.

But the new order, issued Friday by Judge Robert Belloni of U.S. District Court, gives the state until 5 p.m. Monday to appeal. The order doesn't take effect until that time.

The judge said he may extend the ordered closure beyond July 1 to make up for the days lost during the appeal period.

Belloni issued the new order Friday afternoon, a few hours after he lifted his earlier injunction against any commercial ocean salmon trolling during the last two weeks of June.

That order had virtually no practical effect. The state has ignored it because the Washington Supreme Court has upheld a lower court ruling that the offshore commercial season remain open.

Belloni issued the new injunction after an attorney representing the State of Washington tried unsuccessfully to convince the judge that the closure would not be necessary to protect salmon runs in the Columbia River.

Oregon has closed its offshore waters north of Tillamook Head to commercial salmon fishing during the same two-week period. Sport fishing isn't affected.

The closures represent an attempt to assure adequate salmon runs up the Columbia River for treaty Indians. The Washington department of fisheries ordered the ban in order to conform with the federal government wishes.

But in commercial fishing interests in that state got a superior court order blocking the ban, and the Washington Supreme Court upheld the lower court.

Because of the conflicting state and federal rulings, Washington has continued to keep the commercial salmon season open.

Both states have asked Belloni to modify an order issued last summer holding that the Indians are entitled to 50 per cent of the catch of the Columbia Salmon runs.

BALLOON RIDERS TRACK SMOG

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. government observers, riding a helium balloon, followed a polluted air mass from St. Louis to the Indiana cornfields, apparently confirming fears that city-generated pollution can foul the air of distant areas.

The city smog leapfrogged downwind areas during the night, blew eastward and then northwest, finally settling in Indiana 50 miles away.

An Enviornmental Protection Agency official said Friday that the preliminary evidence from the balloon flight seems to confirm other findings that city pollution can foul the air of rural areas—or other cities—hundreds of miles distant.

Such findings raise thorny questions for the U.S. strategy to clean up its air:

Rebel Teamster Beaten by Thugs

LAS VEGAS (UPI) — The leader of a dissident group within the Teamsters union said Friday he was told to leave a union convention party and then beaten by three or four men waiting outside.

Peter Camaratta, who headed an unsuccessful attempt to put a ceiling on the salaries of teamsters president Frank Fitzsimmons and other ranking leaders, said he could not get help from police after the attack.

Police said they responded to a call and one of the men had been caught by hotel guards, but Camaratta would not press charges.

Camaratta said he filed no charges because police "tore up the report and said he would be wasting our time."

He was not seriously injured.

Camaratta said sergeants at arms told him to leave a party Thursdy night, the final social event of the Teamsters' 21st convention at a hotel on the "Strip."

"A delegate stopped me by the front door to chat and when I turned around I got smacked in the head," he said. "I was out. They started kicking me and my friends tried to pull them off."

He said he received a black eye, face and head cuts and "a puffed up left ear."

Camaratta's assistant, Steve Kindred, said "they were kicking him when he was down and they would have kept kicking him if we hadn't pulled them off."

"It looked like it was an organized thing but I don't think the people at the top had anything to do with it," Camaratta said. He added that one assailant looked "like somebody probably hired off the street."

Camaratta, of Detroit Local 229, Fitzsimmons' home local, heads "Teamsters for a Democratic Union," a group challenging the rule and practices of the union leadership.

Export Grain Prices Rigged

WASHINGTON (WP) — International grain firms sent false price reports to the Common Market in the 1960s to rig European import duties to their advantage, according to documents released Friday by Senate investigators.

The practice was reported to the department of agriculture in February 1967, but the information apparently was not passed on to the Common Market for fear of jeopardizing "rapport" with the export companies, the same documents showed.

These and other details about the role of the major grain firms in setting world commodity prices were disclosed Friday at the first of six days of hearings on the global grain trade by the senate subcommittee on multinational corporations.

The false price reporting was mentioned in a February 1967, memo to the agriculture department from Alan Trick, then-U.S. agricultural attache in Hamburg and now the American attache in Moscow.

At the time, Trick was relying on the multinational companies in Europe to supply accurate information on grain offered for delivery in Rotterdam. Trick told the department that the company-supplied prices, which he reported daily to Washington, were more accurate than those given to the Common Market headquarters in Brussels.

He said that was "because we are trusted not to report information to any German or EEC (Common Market) reporting agency, which is often being given incorrect prices in an effort to influence EEC (import) levies."

In a document attached to the memo, Trick stated that "intentionally deceptive reporting (to Brussels) which occurs frequently is done to influence applicable levies — i.e., to increase or decrease them according to the desires of the reporter."

Senate investigators said Friday they could not determine if false pricing practices had continued. European officials and trade sources said last fall that the Common Market had introduced some controls to prevent such practices. Company officials denied to the investigators that they practised manipulation, said assistant subcommittee counsel Ira Nordlicht.

GIRLS CAPTIVE

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A 16-year-old girl who is alleged to have been kept imprisoned in her bedroom for four years was afraid to escape because of her adopted parents' dogs, her older sister says.

Donna Marie Johnson, 19, step-sister of young Laura Johnson who was rescued by police Wednesday said Friday she escaped similar treatment last month by prying open the bedroom door with a bedpost.

She said she and Laura were locked in an 8-by-10-foot bedroom, repeatedly beaten, denied food and left to cower in excrement.

Three Great Danes ostensibly purchased for protection against burglars prevented Laura from escaping, Donna said.

Police freed Laura after Donna told them of her situation. Battered and weighing only 63 pounds, Laura was reported in fair condition in hospital.

Police interviewed Donna and her brother, Donald, on Friday, learning that all three adopted children had been subjected to the same treatment. Donna and Donald are of mixed black and Korean heritage. Donald, 22, fled the Johnson home five years ago, police said.

Donna said she hesitated to go to police with her tale after she escaped last month.

"I was afraid my mother would beat her (Laura) to death. And I was also afraid the police wouldn't believe me. I had run away from home several times before and each time the police would take me back home."

She said she had told police she was being beaten and starved but they did not believe her. Donna now lives with an aunt.

Cunard Makes First Visit

While her sister ship was trucking sheep between Australia and the Persian Gulf, the Cunard Adventurer was making her maiden call at Victoria Friday.

The cruise ship starts the first of 10 seven-day cruises to Alaska from Vancouver today.

The British government had to bail out the famous shipping line which started in Nova Scotia in 1840.

Part of the pare-back program to keep Cunard going resulted in the sale of the Cunard Ambassador, which now hauls sheep instead of passengers on shipboard holidays.

In making a presentation to the ship's master, Capt. Lawrence Portet, city Mayor Mike Young noted he had only made one ocean passage in his life . . . and that was on a Cunard ship in 1948.

Frank Potter, the company's Toronto-based sales manager, warned the mayor there were 15 travel agents attending the ship's reception and it was unlikely his next sea trip was far off.

Young presented Potter with a tray, embossed with the city's coat of arms. In turn, Potter gave Young a china plate centred with a picture of the ship under way and an ash tray, also embossed with a picture of the ship.

Potter announced British Columbians will get a special break for this summer's cruises, providing they are willing to go at the last minute.

The ship can carry 600 passengers and Potter said if there were any vacancies 15 days before she was due to sail, British Columbians would get a standby package, the husband paying full price, the wife being charged half that amount, and any child, $125.

The 486-foot 14,000-ton vessel cruises between 13 and 18 knots and has a maximum speed of 21. She has a crew of 300, all her officers, stateroom and public room staff being British. The restaurant's staff is mostly European and the kitchen is manned by a multination crew.

This is the first time a Cunard ship has visited Victoria. Potter quipped that it took Cunard 136 years to make the trans-Canada crossing while the pioneers could make it in two years in covered wagons.

Built in Rotterdam in 1971, the Cunard Adventurer has been operating out of Puerto Rico.

Potter said she will be replaced on that run by a new ship, the Cunard Countess, due to be completed Aug. 14. Her sister ship will be ready for operation next Feb. 15.

Both the new ships were built in Copenhagen and their furnishings will be completed in Italy.

After the Alaska cruise season is finished the Cunard Adventurer will operate out of Fort Everglades, Fla.

Bearding the Elusive Iris In Its Bulbous Hideaway

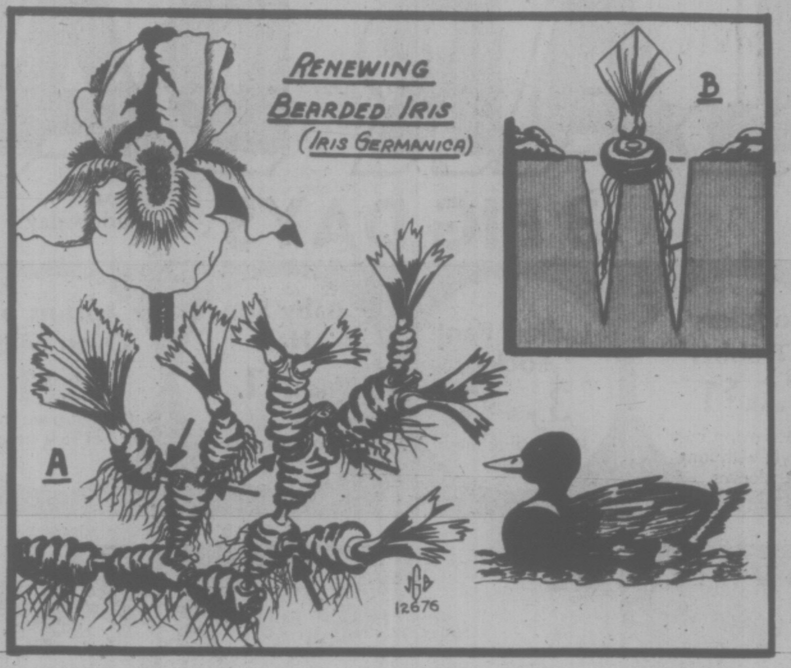
Iris germanica, the Bearded or German Iris, has long been an important plant in the labor-free perennial border, bridging the gap between late tulips and early summer flowers.

There are many kinds of irises. Some grow from bulbs, others from fleshy roots, but Iris germanica belongs to the group that grow from rhizomes, the same as Iris pseudacorus, the common yellow flag.

Rhizomes (rye-zomes) are fleshy stems that grow at soil level. The leaves and flowers appear at one end, and roots descend into the soil from the lower portion which is underground.

New rhizomes are made each year at the tips of the older ones causing the clumps to extend far beyond their orignal boundaries as the plants reach out for new and more nutritious soil. Leaves and flowers are carried at the extremities and the centre becomes a mass of old bare rhizomes.

When this stage is reached it is time for the gardener to take action. The soil is usually depleted and the flowers and foliage far from perfect, so the work is started as soon as the last flowers fade.



RENEWING BEARDED IRIS (IRIS GERMANICA)
B
JGB 12676

The first job is to tie name tags on each clump to prevent a mix-up when replanting. Lacking verietal names, tag each clump with its color, because groups of one color are more effective than a random mixture.

Next, all the clumps are lifted with a digging fork, most of the soil removed, then stacked in a heap in the shade of a fence, building or tree.

The soil in the old bed is levelled and covered with a six-inch layer of compost or leafmold, then dug to incorporate this humus as equally as possible to a depth of about eight inches. Do not use animal manures on an iris bed as they encourage the iris borer which ruins the plants.

The surface is then levelled and will take a fair amount of tramping to compact the soil so that the replanted rhizomes are unable to sink and become smothered.

Now back to the shady spot and the heap of old clumps. Each clump is thoroughly washed with a medium strong jet of water from the hose to remove any remaining soil so we can see where to work. A typical washed clump is shown in the illustration at A.

Five rhizomes are indicated with leaves attached. These are the pieces to be replanted, the arrows showing where they are severed from the old clump with a sharp knife.

For convenience in handling, the leaves are shortened to the shape shown in drawing B. This shape is obtained by making two slashes with a razor sharp knife from each outer edge to the centre of the fan. The cut should start about six inches above the rhizome at the outer edge and end at about nine inches in the centre, so as not to damage new growths which are already present within the old fan. Be sure to keep the varieties or colors separate when this is done.

The old roots will die, but at present they are useful for anchoring the rhizomes in position until new roots have formed. They can be shortened to four or five inches for ease of handling.

The discarded rhizomes and foliage go to the compost heap. Both will rot down more quickly when chopped into small pieces.

The gardener will keep as many, or as few, rhizomes as needed to refill the space. It is a good idea to plant three to five rhizomes in a group about nine inches apart. This gives a fine display of large flowers the following year.

The actual planting of an iris rhizome is quite different to the planting of bulbs, corms and tubers. For good flowering the rhizomes must be half out of the soil so as to be sun-baked in summer.

To obtain, and maintain, this position, the bed has to be tramped fairly firm, then two holes are made with a hand-trowel in such a way as to leave a ridge of solid soil on which the rhizome is placed, as shown at B in the drawing.

A little bonemeal is dropped into each hole and covered with a dash of soil, and the top of the ridge is lower by one-half the thickness of the rhizome that is being planted. This lowering of the ridge has to be adjusted to the size of each rhizome.

One important point must not be forgotten. When setting the rhizomes on the ridge of soil the fan of leaves must be to the north and the rhizome to the south, otherwise the leaves will shade the rhizome during its baking period and flowering will suffer.

The roots on the rhizome are divided approximately down the centre and grasped in each hand, and the rhizome is set on top of the ridge. The holes are then filled with fine soil or compost which is pressed tightly against the roots. Levelling the bed, and a good watering to settle the soil around the roots, finishes the job.

Plantings as outlined here leaves the rhizomes half-in and half-out of the soil, or as the old gardening books say, "like a duck floating on water."

WORK FOR WEEK

Fuchsias will grow rapidly in warmer weather and soon form flower buds if fertilizer is held off until blooming commences.

Geraniums have not prospered in cool nights but should improve with warmth. Water only when needed; remove flower buds until plants recover from cold. Plants in good shape may be allowed to bloom.

Sow more peas, including edible pod; spinach, chard, carrots, endive and lettuce. Also beets, sweet corn in hope of warmer soil now to come.

Thin out new raspberry canes if crowded. Do not cultivate near roots for they are shallow. Don't forget they need water to swell and ripen the fruits.

Squash, cucumber and marrow plants should be planted out this weekend even though perhaps needing light protection on cool nights. But they will be hardened too much, or too weakened, if kept under cover much longer. Better to take a chance with them now.

Maintain watering for rhubarb, Jerusalem artichokes and potatoes at roots during dry spells or if rain has not penetrated.

Fuel Fumes Causing Climatic Threat

GENEVA (UPI) — Burning oil and other fossil fuels could raise the earth's temperature by several degrees in the next 100 years with serious economic and social repercussions, the World Meteorological Organization said today.

"Burning oil and coal increases the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and could produce a long-term warming of the earth and, as a consequence, large-scale changes in rainfall distribution," the WMO said in a technical report.

"The best information available indicates that a large carbon dioxide increase would result in a very significant warming of global climate by several degrees centigrade," WMO said.

"The general warming could conceivably culminate in the total disappearance of the Arctic sea-ice, an extreme situation believed to be without precedent in the past million years," it said.

At the same time, it said natural climate changes could lead to a colder regime in the long term.

"Knowledge of past climate's suggest that the interglacial warmth of the past 8,000 years or so will eventually change to a colder, more glacial regime," WMO said.

SUMMER ARTS CLASS FOR CHILDREN

A summer visual arts program for children aged 5 to 12 years is being offered at the Emily Carr Arts Centre, 207 Government.

Classes will take place Saturdays from 10:30 a.m. to noon and Tuesdays for preschoolers from 10.30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Mothers are welcome at the Tuesday sessions.

The children work with paints, clay and round objects and create their own works of art. Enquiries concerning the classes can be made at the Centre or telephone 382-4922.

SUICIDE CLAIMS MANY ALBERTANS

CALGARY (CP) — Suicide is the second-leading cause of death in Alberta for persons 15 to 34 and the fourth highest among persons 35 to 54, the annual symposium of Alberta Coroners and Medical examiners, was told Thursday.

Menno Boldt, associate professor of sociology at University of Lethbridge, said that in any given year there are four times as many suicides as murders in the province.

Among middle-aged Albertans, he continued, suicide as a cause of death is surpassed only by auto accidents, cancer and heart disease.

The rate of suicide in Canada has risen steadily. By 1971, the national incidence of suicide in persons 15 to 19 was more than three times higher than in 1961.

Encyclopedia Firm Backs Promotions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Howard Berge, a lawyer for P. F. Collier and Son Ltd., says the real issue in a British Columbia Supreme Court action against the firm is the acceptability or propriety of its selling procedures now.

Collier was named defendant in an action brought by the Consumer Association of Canada and the Consumer Services Department.

They are seeking a permanent injunction against the company's use of practices the court is being asked to rule as deceptive and illegal under the trade practices act.

Berge said the company did concede that certain features of the sales presentation used by the company's encyclopedia salesmen around December, 1974, were objectionable under the trade practices act.

The company also conceded that the statement that the salesmen were taking a survey of educational materials would be misleading. Salesmen were at that time using the statement to gain admittance to prospective customers' homes.

Current procedure was outlined by Collier's general manager for B.C., Walter Gray, who qualified his statements by saying that it was the procedure taught salesmen and, to best of his knowledge and experience, was the one they used.

They must now present their identification cards at the doors they approach and say they are talking with young couples in the area.

Gray also outlined the procedure, noting the times in which pauses were allowed and time for discussion and questions by the prospective customer.

Dr. Robert Kelly, an expert witness called by the plaintiffs, had said the presentation had not allowed for more than prompted questions and remarks and had not left a time in which to object.

Under cross examination, Dr. Kelly said he had come to his opinion on the basis of reading the "script" for the presentation and not hearing it.

He conceded that in an actual presentation, the pauses may be longer depending on the salesman and the circumstances.

Dr. Kelly said the presentation was proper as long as the prospective customer's questions were answered.

Photography Print Show On Loan

A selection of original prints under the title, B.C. Photographers, is at present on view at Secession Gallery, Open Space, 510 Fort. The prints are on loan from Vancouver Art Gallery's extension department and will be seen here until the end of June.

There are 46 of the original total of 150 prints from about 30 photographers living and working in B.C. Assembled in the spring of 1975, the exhibit has been touring the province appearing in over 40 centres.

A flexible and broad assortment, it is not intended as a representative selection but simply a display of some of the work being done in the province by young photographers.

Gallery hours are noon to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday.

Lamb Barbecue Time Again On Saturna

Saturna Community Club's annual lamb barbecue is on again on Dominion Day.

In addition to the lamb which is the main course, there will be games, beginning at 11 a.m., and a beverage garden with beer and wine.

Hot dogs and pop, are also planned.

The barbecue starts at 2:30 p.m. Ferries leave Swartz Bay for Saturna at 5:30 a.m. and 9:45 a.m. and return at 4 p.m. and 10 p.m.

The 9:45 a.m. trip winds through the Gulf Islands before it reaches Saturna at 12:15.

Ferry prices are $2 per passenger, and $5 for a vehicle, one way.

Language Gap Halts Trial

VANCOUVER (CP) — Contempt of court charges against 13 strikers at Skyway Luggage Limited of Vancouver was heard in British Columbia Supreme Court Friday for more than an hour before the court learned that two of them couldn't understand English.

Defence lawyer David Blair told Mr. Justice Allan MacFarlane after morning break that two of the women charged spoke only Portuguese.

Blair said a Portuguese interpreter was unable to attend the morning session.

Several other accused had some difficulty in understanding English but could get by with the help of fellow strikers, he said.

Mr. Justice MacFarlane decided to adjourn the hearings until later in the day so that appropriate interpreters could attend.

The hearing is expected to last three days.

The strikers are alleged to have violated a court order prohibiting them from interfering with vehicles entering or leaving the plant.

The charges were laid after an incident Monday when a truck was allegedly prevented from leaving the plant.

Eight strikes and the Upholsters International Union were convicted June 11 for contempt of court following a violation of a court order May 30.

The 105 assembly-line workers at the plant have been on strike since April 9 to win inceases in wages now averaging $2.85 an hour. The provincial minimum wage has since been increased to $3 an hour.

The union is demanding a $3.50 hourly increase over two years while the company offered 70 cents over three years.

Negotiations have broken off and no new talks are scheduled.

INFLATION BILL LAW MONDAY

The Anti-Inflation Measures Act, which will allow the B.C. government to join the federal wage and price control program, will become law on Monday.

The proclamation date was released in a cabinet order-in-council Friday.

The bill, given a rough ride through the legislature, also allows the government to impose price freezes on various items if the federal anti-inflation program is not effective.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe has said B.C. will likely sign an agreement with Ottawa before the end of the month and prior to a Supreme Court of Canada ruling on whether the federal program is constitutional.

Premier Bill Bennett has said any agreement between Ottawa and B.C. would end April 1, 1977, when the province will probably have its own anti-inflation program in place.

The Anti-Inflation Measures Act permits the government to set maximum prices for goods or services for 60 days if the legislature is sitting when the order is made.

If the legislature is not in session, the freeze will end 60 days after the beginning of the next session.

'Cloak and Dagger' Bill Defended by Socreds

A bill introduced by the Social Credit government distorts the intention of the parliamentary system, NDP MLA Dennis Cocke said Friday.

Cocke, speaking during debate of second reading of the Government Reorganization Act, said the bill is "cloak and dagger legislation" that takes away the traditional authority of the legislature to review acts of cabinet.

The bill would give cabinet the power to establish a new portfolio, cancel an existing one or transfer duties from one department to another without legislative consent.

Cocke charged the bill gives additional "power to one person — power to the premier."

"It is dangerous to invest this kind of power and authority in one man," Cocke said.

Provincial Secretary Grace McCarthy, sponsor of the bill, said outside the house the bill is "simple and technical."

"It does not have the powers the opposition is attributing to it," she said.

McCarthy said the bill simply "legitimizes" what governments have been doing for years.

The bill contains a clause which would legally establish the new department of the environment which was set up shortly after the Socreds were elected.

Under existing legislation, no new portfolio can be set up without debate and consent of the legislature.

NDP MLA Graham Lea (Prince Rupert) said the Socreds would have been unalterably opposed to the legislation if it had been brought in by the NDP.

"The electorate is fair and they might just vote us in next time and would you really want us to have those kind of powers?" he asked.

Tory leader Scott Wallace and Liberal leader Gordon Gibson also opposed the bill. Gibson referred to it as "The Turkey Protection Act."

The bill will be up for further debate later in the session.

The provincial government later countered the opposition's "frivolous" behavior with the scheduling of morning sittings of the legislature.

Mrs. McCarthy said outside the legislature the NDP members of the legislature were not serious about debating the Government Reorganization Act.

She said there was a lot of work yet to be done before the session adjourns and so the legislature will begin sitting at 10 a.m.

She said consideration will also be given to night sittings on Mondays and Wednesdays in order to get through the legislative workload.

Normally, the legislature sits in the afternoon and at night on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

AIB PINCHING, CUPE TOLD

VANCOUVER (CP) — This has been a year of "rollbacks, cutbacks and setbacks" for the Canadian Labor Force, Kealey Cummings, national secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE), said Friday.

Cummings told B.C. CUPE delegates to their annual convention that if federal and provincial governments don't change their tune, it might also be the "year of the fightback."

He said Canadian workers have suffered set-back after set-back this year because of federal Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

SC AD AGENT TERM EXTENDED

The appointment of Dave Brown, a Vancouver advertising agent hired last January as a special adviser to the B.C. government, has been extended for a second time.

Brown, employed as a public relations adviser to the Social Credit Party during last December's general election campaign, was originally appointed for 90 days after the party won the election, to compile a report on information services for the government.

The 90-day appointment, for which Brown receives a daily pay rate of $125, expired and a 30-day extension was ordered last May.

The order released Friday adds another 30 days.

Brown said in an interview he is obligated to work each day stipulated in the cabinet order, meaning a 30-day extension requires him to work 30 days.

He said he has spent at least 120 days working on his study and more time is required.

It is expected Brown will eventually be hired as a permanent government employee.

Pen Hostage Still Suffering

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Classification officer John Ryan, one of 16 hostages taken by three prisoners a year ago at the British Columbia Penitentiary, said Friday he is still under medical treatment for stress and injuries suffered in the 41-hour siege.

Ryan told an inquest into the death of classification officer Mary Steinhauser that he has not worked since the incident which began June 9, 1975.

He said he required eye surgery after prisoner Dwight Lucas sprayed insecticide into his eyes and poured liquid antiseptic over his head while he was held in a vault in the classification area.

Lucas, Andrew Bruce and Claire Wilson seized the hostages. Miss Steinhauser was shot and killed when a prison tactical squad rushed the trio after hearing noises from the vault area.

Ryan was wearing dark glasses when he told Coroner Doug Jack and the jury of being kicked repeatedly by Lucas. He said Lucas also stuck a knife into his eye.

He also said Lucas told the hostages that he (Ryan) "Would be the first to go" in case of trouble. Ryan said Lucas was not on his caseload.

Greg Adair, another classification officer, said he heard Bruce yell, "that's it, you sonsofbitches. You've done it. Now you have killed her," when the tactical squad rushed the hostages.

Bruce was holding Miss Steinhauser outside the vault when she was killed. Bruce also was shot in the jaw, but later recovered.

Lawyer Wally Lightbody, representing prison staff at the inquest, said that Adair was one of the hostages who has been harassed since the incident. He said the intimidation took place at Adair's home.

Adair said it occurred after his testimony last summer at the Farris Inquiry into the incident. The inquiry was conducted by Justice John Farris of the B.C. Supreme Court. Results of that inquiry are expected to be released at the conclusion of the inquest.

Jack said the inquest would resume Monday with tightened rules of evidence for lawyers. The jury has at times requested lawyers questioning witnesses to keep their questioning to the point.

Kinnaird Press Mediator

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jim Kinnaird, former British Columbia associate deputy labor minister will mediate the contract dispute between Pacific Press and the Joint Council of Newspaper Unions.

Kinnaird's appointment was announced Friday by Ed Peck, B.C. Labor Relations Board vice-chairman.

Pacific Press publishes the Province and Sun newspapers.

Peck met with both sides in the dispute Friday and with Kinnaird to discuss the situation. Peck said the mediator is to meet Monday with the parties for initial discussions and hopes to get full mediation proceedings under way by the end of the month.

Peck also said that the photoengravers union which withdrew from the joint council earlier in a jurisdictional dispute is being invited to take part.

Mayors Support Olympics

VANCOUVER (CP) — Delegates to the 39th annual conference of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities wrapped up their four-day meeting here Friday with a show of support for the Montreal Olympics.

Alderman Frank Marcino of North Vancouver City withdrew his council's resolution that the federation oppose federal or provincial aid to the debt-ridden games after Mayor Guy Descary of Lachine, Que., made a strong pleas for delegate support of the games.

Mayor Descary, president of the Conference of Mayors of the Montreal Urban Community, urged delegates to ignore the cost and help make the games "the greatest Canadian undertaking in this century."

The 150 delegates who remained for the final plenary session Friday afternoon voted to wish the Olympics every success. More than 600 delegates registered for the conference, which began Tuesday.

Resolutions dealing with revenue-sharing and local government autonomy received most attention.

Delegates adopted a report on municipal finance and revenue-sharing that will form the basis for discussion at a meeting of municipal, provincial and federal representatives Oct. 21 in Montebello, Que.

The federation also adopted a resolution demanding the federal government immediately amend the British North America Act to recognize local governments and establish a permanent relationship between the three levels of government.

Delegates also approved a wide-ranging resolution calling on the federal government to prepare a national urban transportation policy with specific emphasis on mass transit in large urban centres.

Most of the more than 130 resolutions concerned so-called motherhood issues such as housing and land use, recreation, culture and small and rural community problems.

The federation has been asked to set up a national information campaign to better explain municipal government to the public.

Delegates rejected as unworkable resolutions asking the Canadian Radio-Television Commission set aside time on radio and television for news of local government and a free-time period on a nation-wide basis comparable to that given elected provincial and federal politicians.

LABOR ASKS CURTIS TO PROTECT LAND

Mount Stephen property, originally ear-marked for low-cost housing, should be kept out of the hands of developers, the Victoria Labor Council said in a letter to Housing Minister Hugh Curtis Friday.

The letter, signed by labor council secretary Larry Ryan, said in part: "The government's commitment to the city of Victoria clearly provides that this property is to be used for low-cost housing.

"The proposed sale to private developers would add greatly to the cost of housing to be built at Mount Stephen."

Questions concerning Mount Stephen arose after Curtis decided to put a $600,000 price tag on the Victoria property, which had been bought originally from the city for $190,000.

Some of the questions came from Charles Barber (NDP—Victoria) who wanted an explanation as to why there should be a $400,000 profit in three years. This included a private lot bought for $10,000.

On Tuesday, Curtis said the government hadn't discarded the idea of developing Mount Stephen for moderate and affordable housing.

He defended the $400,000 price increase, saying it simply reflected the assessed value of the land. While he regretted the rise in value, he said that selling it for far less than the present market rate would mean a windfall profit for the new owners.

The government wanted proposals for rental or ownership housing that would fall into the "moderate or affordable" category, Curtis said.

In its letter to Curtis, the labor council asked that he "explore all alternatives to provide much-needed available housing on the property . . ."

One alternative suggested was Dunhill Corporation, the agency established by the former NDP government to pave the way for less expensive housing.

RUB PARLORS LOSE IN COURT

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two body rub parlors failed Friday in a British Columbia Supreme Court bid to quash a city bylaw ordering their nude female attendants to cover up.

Mr. Justice F. Craig Munroe dismissed an application by the Swedish Touch and the Studio Parlors.

Both claimed the bylaw and its $3,000 annual licence fee was prohibitory, unfair and oppressive.

Doing the Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Big sale coming up at Wilson's . . .

For the past hundred years and more . . . Wilson's big annual January sale has been an anticipated event for Victorians . . . one they waited a whole year for . . . And once it was over, that was about it, except for occasional racks of markdowns, when space was needed to accommodate new merchandise . . . Well, this summer something new is about to happen . . . There's going to be a terrific clearance sale in Wilson's ladies' dept. . . . from July 2 to 10 . . . and we're letting you in on the big news almost two weeks ahead so you can start your own planning now . . . Believe us, this is going to be a really BIG sale . . . with bargains that will knock your eyes out! . . . Here's a quick run-down on what's to go on sale on July 2 . . . at Wilson's downtown store only . . . Beautiful Viyella blouses . . . plus all sorts of other blouses . . . More than 200 expensive, lightweight one-piece dresses . . . Two-piece dresses . . . Long dresses of all kinds, including some lurex beauties . . . Pantsuits in lightweight knits . . . Finely tailored fabric suits . . . Knit suits in synthetics and summer weights . . . Long velvet evening coats . . . Not too many of these, so if you'd like one, get there early! . . . There'll be other odds and ends, too . . . but the emphasis is on fine quality clothing . . . So mark a red ring around July 2 on your calendar! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport Ave., 592-2821.

Ever tried folding violet leaves and blossoms into an omelet?

Something excitingly new at Standard . . .

Standard Furniture is always so much "with it" in providing Victorians with the very last word in fine furniture and appliances . . . that nothing they might do could ever surprise us! . . . Guess what they've done now: opened a sewing centre, no less! Featuring Bernina and Omega sewing machines . . . two of the finest machines on the market . . . the former made in Switzerland, the latter in Japan . . . The Omega comes with a one-year guarantee on parts and one year on labor . . . which is done right here . . . though we very much doubt if it will be needed! . . . Three models of portables which do all manner of wonderful things . . . Special price on one of these models is just $124.88 . . . As for the Bernina . . . the most expensive of the two makes . . . it's really deluxe . . . with 20 different decorative stitches and knee-controlled foot lifter . . . This machine, we gather, will do just about everything but talk! . . . So . . . we do urge you to drop in to Standard's new sewing centre and let the very knowledgeable gentleman there show you all the features of these fine machines . . . We were completely fascinated when we saw them on Friday and had their prowess explained to us . . . Enough to send any woman who sews mad with desire! . . . And if she's a non-sewer . . . why, Standard will provide her with lessons! . . . Sound good? . . . Go in soon! . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

"Magnificent" is the word for this . . .

Now while it's true that the Handloom has always had a variety of distinctive hand-made jewellery . . . this season they've acquired some real expensive, completely gorgeous contemorarily styled jewellery . . . one-of-a-kind pieces which you really must see! . . . There's a magnificent Chatham emerald ring with three diamonds, set in 18 kt. gold . . . A moonstone ring with six sapphires . . . a lovely gold and silver bracelet with cabachon moonstone and five rubies . . . plus so many other pieces space doesn't permit us to rave over! . . . Real good stuff this, running into the hundreds of dollars! . . . But enough of this drooling! . . . We also saw some smashing handwoven chemises . . . much like one we saw Princess Grace wearing recently . . . over a turtleneck and pants . . . And a couple of lovely Alfoldy batik wall hangings depicting scenes from the Cariboo . . . one a barnyard scene in which you can almost smell the hay . . . the other a snow-covered field with farm buildings and mountain backdrop . . . There are beautiful little porcupine quill baskets made by the Algonquin Indians . . . very rare these days! . . . And do look over the "glass menagerie" . . . tiny crystal animals . . . including mice, worms, frogs, fish, etc. . . . and the most adorable kangaroo with a Joey in her pouch! . . . Handloom, 625 Trounce Alley, 384-1011 and Empress Hotel, 384-1518.

The name of fashion designer Halston can now be found on wigs with an uncluttered, natural look.

New branch of Island Florist . . .

We did a double-take as we were driving up Oak Bay Avenue the other day and spied a brand new flower shop on the corner of the Avenue and Fell St. . . . Incurably curious . . . we stopped the car and went in . . . only to find, who do you think? . . . our friend Norma Fitzsimmons of Island Florist, who informed us that this is the Island Florists' new branch . . . although its name is different! . . . And what a delightful store it is! . . . Beautifully laid out, in a new, air-conditioned building . . . surrounded with attractive landscaping . . . and the sunlight pouring in from all directions! . . . called "Norma's Avenue Florist" . . . it has a few very exclusive lines . . . like the exquisite jewellery hand-made with natural dried flowers and straws encased in sparkling plexiglass! . . . There are rings, large and small pendants on chains . . . Suprisingly inexpensive and pretty as can be! . . . Noticed some very unusual straw flower pictures hanging on the wall . . . A lovely line of English copper and brass . . . elegant copper watering can . . . little window sill planters, jardinieres, etc. . . . Gorgeous silk flower arrangements made by Mrs. F. herself . . . Really good macrame plant hangers . . . and a lot of different hanging plants . . . including bridal veil and achimenes . . . a purple flowering plant which will bloom lavishly all summer! . . . Norma's Avenue Florist, 1842 Oak Bay Ave., 595-1224.

Tales of Old Vienna . . .

You won't hear any Strauss waltzes when you enter the Vienna Dirndl Shop and Ilse of Victoria . . . but you'll certainly see a lot of imported things redolent of the beautiful country which is Austria! . . . Small wonder there are always people popping in to purchase gifts with a difference! . . . Speaking of gifts, we'll tell you first about some small and inexpensive items which caught our eye . . . like bookmarks with real edelweiss encased in plastic, and miniature ski boots attached to key chains . . . a thermometer set on a ski . . . and another in a ski boot . . . black velvet chokers with a petitpoint pin in front . . . petitpoint-covered thimbles (which lots of people are collecting now) . . . Little Swiss music boxes to hang on an infant's crib . . . great gift for the new-born . . . There are lovely Austrian table cloths, doilies, mats, scarves, aprons and head scarves . . . in brightly-colored cotton bordered with Austrian figures . . . Beautiful peasant blouses . . . drip-dry cotton with colorful Austrian braid, or eyelet lace trimming, made by Ilse . . . Other hand-embroidered peasant blouses from Hungary . . . Austrian buttons and braids of all kinds . . . and the niftiest halter tops we've ever seen! White or denim with build-in bras and flattering collars! . . . Vienna Dirndl Shop and Ilse of Victoria, 1306 Government St., 386-9722.

There's a formula afoot for the new loungewear; batteau neckline, elbow-length sleeves and side slits on a slim shape.

Sail to the Mexican Riviera on a Princess . . .

Does the sight of the cruise ships starting to come in to Victoria make you feel that you, too, are about due to enjoy the inimitable joys of cruising . . . on a beautiful, well-appointed ship? . . . Then hi yourself to Paulin's and ask them about the Princess cruises to Mexico this fall and winter . . . Fall cruising season will start in late September . . . and Paulin's now have all the sailing dates through Jan. 10, 1977 . . . Princess cruises are part of our old friend P & O . . . and their fall and winter cruises sail from Los Angeles to Acapulco and back . . . for different durations from 7 to 11 days . . . If you book a certain grade of accommodation, which Paulin's will explain to you, you'll be given $200 towards your air fare (until the end of December) . . . Effective Jan. 1st the air fare allowance will be $150 . . . All of which is a consideration, isn't it? . . . Anyway, if you've got the cruising bug, go in to Paulin's and let them give you all the details about these great cruises . . . And don't for get, Paulin's have moved . . . new office is just around the corner! . . . Paulin Travel, 532 Broughton St., 382-9168.

HOW TO COVER YOUR RACQUET

By MAY E. MacLEAN

Needing a new tennis racquet cover, and having seen one made of patchwork at the club, I had a good look at it, and decided to make one myself. Here's how I went about it.

You will need about half a yard of forty-five inch wide heavy muslin, scraps of material for the patchwork, these should all be the same weight of material. I choose pieces of double knits in white, navy and red. You will also need a package of double folded bias tape, which ever is the predominant colour, plus a spool of thread and one yard of Velcro tape.

Add a quarter-inch seam allowance to all pattern pieces. Lay the tennis racquet to be covered on a sheet of heavy paper, using only the tennis racquet you intend to cover, since there are many racquet sizes and shapes. Two racquets may look the same but can be different.

Trace around the head of the racquet and down the neck three inches on each side to create a pattern for the cover. Measuring carefully with a ruler, add one inch to all sides of the pattern to account for the width of the racquet and the seams.

Cut out the pattern, keeping curved edges as smooth and true as possible. Lay the pattern on the heavy muslin, pin in place and trace two patterns with a heavy pencil, but do not cut out at this time.

From the scraps of materials with which you are making the patchwork, make odd shapes, fairly uniform in area size. Lay the scaps on the uncut muslin patterns, and shuffle around until the colour combination is balanced. Pin these pieces in place, slightly overlapping the edges.

Using the zig-zag stitch on your machine, secure the pieces to the muslin, and cover the raw edges of the materials at the same time. Be sure also that the edges of the pieces slightly overlapped seamlines, so that all edges will be covered when pattern pieces are sewn together.

When all the patchwork pieces are sewn down, carefully cut out the pattern shapes, being careful to cut them both the same. Baste on continuous length of bias tape all around outer edges of each shape, then sew into place and top-stitch.

Lay head of racquet at the neck of pattern shape to determine how wide the neck opening should be to allow the racquet to be inserted or removed from cover. Mark this point at either side of the shapes.

With wrong sides facing, pin both pattern shapes together and join by sewing from one mark on the side to the other around the head of cover. Sew strips of Velcro to the edges of neck openings.

This makes a lovely gift idea for a favourite friend or teen-ager, or even as a bazaar item!

KNIT and CHAT

This week's pattern is an Aran version of the popular tunic jacket and skirt ensemble! Embossed panels of twists and seed-stitch, also known as moss-stitch, co-ordinate these separates!

These Aran or Irish-knit stitches are simple enough for a beginner to try! If you are a quick knitter, make this outfit for wear during Spring, or if you do not like to hurry when knitting, make it for wear in the Fall!

Instructions are given in four sizes, 12 through to 18, fitting bust measurement of 32 through to 38 inches, and knitted of course with an Aran wool of a double knitting weight.

To order Leaflet No. 7018, send fifty cents in coin, PLUS a stamped self addressed return envelope, long one if possible. Case of the Snoring Cat

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Princess has been developing this unladylike habit of snoring. She started two months ago, and it's getting worse daily. Nightly, too, fr that matter. It's annoying, but we can put up with it. The question is why after five years of no noise, would a cat begin to snore? Never knew of one to do this before.—G.A.

DEAR G. A.: Since silent snoozing is the norm among felines, sudden snoring suggests something in sinus, nasal cavities, or related areas. Whether the condition is correctible surgically and, if so, whether surgery should be performed, would be up to Princess' veterinarian to determine.

DEAR DR. MILLER: A friend was horrified when she saw me feeding Molly my pet hamster, a mealworm. Molly loves to nibble on one occasionally. I've never known them to disagree with her so far. Are they really supposed to be harmful to the hamster? —B. A.

DEAR B. A.: Molly's mealworm munching provides her with variety in a protein-packed package. It's an excellent occasional snack.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I spilled some hot soup. It didn't get on the floor because the dog was lying here. She jumped up and ran, but came back after a while and I couldn't see anything so I forgot about it. Now a big patch of skin fell off her back and she really looks terrible. Aside from taking care of her this time, which I'm getting done now, what do you do when a dog's burned? How do you know if it really is?—B. F.

DEAR B. F.: Usually a burned pet will leave the scene immediately. Any time a hot substance is spilled and lands on the pet, it's reasonable to assume the animal is burned in the process. Step one is to immediately soak the burned area (and-or whatever other areas are necessary to accomplish this) in cold water. In fact, keep the area in cold water continuously for several minutes. (If the nose is burned, this should not be attempted.) If either a cold water soak or a heavy stream of cold running water cannot be so applied, the burned animal should be rushed immediately to your veterinarian. It should be anyway, but soaking first — if done within seconds of the injury — can greatly relieve pain and the burn damage.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Is a saltwater aquarium as difficult as some people say it is, or is it just a matter of taking proper care of it?—F. N.

DEAR F. N.: Taking proper care of the saltwater aquarium IS what makes it difficult. It is an exacting but potentially rewarding hobby. The beginner would do better, usually, to make a success of the freshwater tank first. Armed with this experience, plus considerable information, he could hope for success in saltwater aquarium keeping.

dear abby

She Won't Hurt a Fly

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter is 14, and she loves animals. She is not just your ordinary animal lover, Abby, she is fanatic about it.

She thinks it is wrong to kill an insect, a mouse or any kind of bug or rodent.

When she sees one of us kill a fly or a cockroach, she carries on like a crazy person.

If we try to set traps to catch mice, she goes into hysterics. How can I convince her that flies and mice carry germs, and it is better to get rid of them?

Please help me. Sometimes I wonder if this child is normal. — WORRIED

DEAR WORRIED: Your daughter's concern for the "sanctity of life" is admirable. But you can explain to her that unless humans exterminate creatures that carry disease and destruction, there will be no life for HUMANS!

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were married two months ago. It was the second marriage for both of us.

Yesterday one of my husband's so-called friends called and told me things about my husband's past that upset me. She said that he had had psychiatric treatment for suicidal tendencies shortly before we met. (I had had psychiatric treatment for the same reason, but I told him about it before we were married. I wonder why he didn't tell me?)

What, if anything, should I do? My primary concern is that my husband should know that this woman is not worthy of his trust. Also, do you think that his secrecy about his past is a sign that our marriage is in trouble? We have gotten along so well, I can't believe it.

There is a possibility, of course, that this woman's stories are untrue. It's hard for me to understand why some people will go out of their way to cause others pain. — PUZZLED

DEAR PUZZLED: Rather than live with doubts, you should tell your husband what this "friend" told you and give him a chance to respond. True or false, it will clear the air. And you'd do well to avoid this woman. She's bad news.

DEAR ABBY: I am an attractive, energetic, fun-loving divorcee who likes a good time, which sometimes gets me into trouble.

While my neighbor was in the hospital having a baby, I sort of lived it up with her husband.

She found out about it, and my life hasn't been the same since. She has called me every name in the book and has even threatened to "get even" with me if it's the last thing she does.

She insists that I talked her husband into it, which is not true. He was as willing as I was. Now her husband is blaming me because his wife is carrying on like a maniac.

I am twice-divorced and know what it's like to have a woman steal her husband. I am no home-wrecker, but what's another slice off a loaf that's already been cut?

How can I get this woman to realize I don't want her husband, I was only having a little fun?—ALL IN FUN

DEAR ALL: Living it up with another woman's husband is hard to live down. Don't try to explain your harmless intentions. And stay out of her way.

Champion of the Magna Carta

elizabeth forbes

Donald Munro, PC member for Esquimalt-Saanich, deserves a plus mark for introducing in the Canadian Parliament, Bill C-435, which would establish June 15 (a date back in 1215 on which King John met his barons at Runnymede and listened to their demands) as Magna Carta Day in this country.

Education authorities in British Columbia — and especially in Vancouver and Victoria — also deserve kudos for stressing in the last several years, the significance of June 15 as Magna Carta Day, and asking school principals to mark the occasion "as the day for the recognition of this historic event through discussion, essays, pageants and plays."

However, there is one other person to whom much praise and thanks should be directed and that is the man who started the recognition idea — Victoria's Wendell B. Shaw.

Shaw has long been firm in his belief that more thought should be given — especially in the schools — to remembering what he believes is the most important freedom document in the English-speaking world — the Magna Carta.

He has thoroughly researched this idea, and throughout almost 25 years of retirement, has worked to bring it to life.

With this in mind I have no hesitation in saying I believe his prodding, through letters, telephone conversations, personal presentations and through his printed articles, started Donald Munro and our school authorities thinking of and working for a Magna Carta Day.

I met Shaw almost two years ago now, and at that time he told me something of his ambition and his dream.

Primarily, he envisioned exactly what is seemingly coming to life now — a Magna Carta Day to be declared annually (especially in the schools) on the anniversary of the day at Runnymede when King John consented to sign the famed Charter.

He also envisioned such a day being further recognized with a yearly pageant, depicting the signing, and with all the colorful trappings of that long ago time.

It would be an eye-catching method of educating the public, he said, to the importance of that famous charter.

And so it would! Right here we have the talent and the know-how to produce such a pageant (witness the recent Victoria High School "Come Give A Cheer") so perhaps when another June rolls around, it, too, could become a fact.

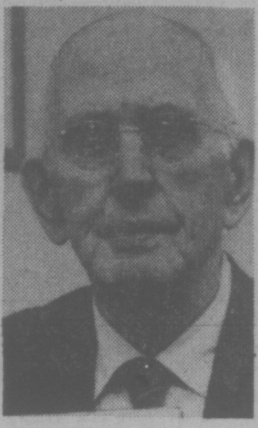
Shaw, who now lives in James Bay Lodge, was born in Hartland, New Brunswick, in the late 1880s. He taught school there and in Alberta before coming to Victoria, and going into real estate.

He was married here to Nora Lugrin, daughter of an early head of the Colonist, and he went overseas from here at the beginning of the First World War.

On retirement from the army in 1919, with the rank of major, and because of chronic asthma, he moved to California and lived there for some years before coming back to Vancouver and then Victoria to retire.

In his retirement he has given a quarter century of time and work to publicizing his belief in the need for more serious study and better knowledge of what he believes is "the first major breakthrough in the age-old battle for human rights."

The other day, when reports of Britain's presentation to an American delegation in London of a gold facsimile of Magna Carta surfaced along with the news of Donald Munro's Bill C-435, I visited Wendell Shaw for a second time.



SHAW

I found his room in the Lodge still overflowing with dozens of books and pamphlets gathered in the course of his research. Many of those books are collectors' items and long out of print.

He has letters containing detailed information from world-renowned historians, also documentation from authorities in public life in Britain and the United States, where he says "Americans have been away ahead of us in realizing the worth of Magna Carta."

There is also a collection of articles Shaw has written about Magna Carta and that he has seen published in Canada and in the United States.

Much of this valuable collection, the tall, grave-faced man told me the other day, will "most likely" go to a Long Beach high school in California where a Magna Carta library has been started, mainly because school authorities there had heard and read of his crusade.

What, I asked, is his re-action to Munro's Bill C-435 and the explanation that it is "to afford Canadians as beneficiaries of the gradual development of representative parliamentary democracy, the opportunity to commemorate the signing of Magna Carta . . ."

Shaw answered that "in almost nine decades of living, no event has thrilled me more than the introduction of Bill C-435, to officially recognize Magna Carta Day, not as a school holiday, but a day to commemorate Magna Carta which bears the date — June 15, 1215."

Then he added "nor can I fully express in words my thanks to the superintendents of schools in Greater Victoria and Vancouver for their kind co-operation in the past three years, and to the directors of curriculum in British Columbia schools."

He also expressed gratitude "to newspapers in Victoria, Vancouver and Sidney, for splendid editorials on Magna Carta in recent years."

Then he concluded with his firm belief that "Magna Carta is the birthright of all English speaking peoples and many others," and that (as a recent San Francisco newspaper said) "it is the bedrock of the British and American systems of constitutional government!"

'Suddenly a Killer'

By DR. WILLIAM J. WELCH

medical report

"How can it be," writes J.L.F., "that a medicine my doctor has been prescribing for me for years is headlined in the press suddenly as a killer that is doing me in? That is what I read about the pill I have been taking to lower my blood sugar and keep my diabetes under control.

"It seems to work, I feel well when I take it, and sick when I don't. Now, my doctor tells me, there is honest controversy among medical experts about the value of medicine and about its long-term danger. What is going on? Why can't doctors get together?"

Deciding whether a medication to lower blood pressure, or almost any medication for that matter, is safe and effective is not as easy as it would at first appear to be. Effectiveness is not always as obvious as it should be. If a patient gets well while taking a particular medication, there are always two possibilities. The first is that the medication was responsible for the happy outcome. The second is that the patient might have been going to get well no matter what treatment he received.

If the course of a large number of comparable patients, treated and untreated, are not available for comparison, you just cannot be sure of correct conclusions.

As for immediate safety, if there are no immediate, untoward side effects of a given medication, by definition that medication can be said to be safe. But, the delayed or long-term side effects, if there are going to be any, will not be known, again by definition until enough time has passed for them to occur.

Thus we have problems in deciding what medications are effective and in finding out what incidental harm they may do.

It is only recently that so-called random, double-blind, controlled testing of medications has been undertaken on a large scale.

The testing means that roughly half of a sufficiently large number of patients, more or less equally severely ill, at about the same stage of their disease will be treated with a given medication, which it is suspected should cure them.

The remaining half of the patients will be treated with a placebo, the dressy name for sugar pills. Neither doctors nor patients, ideally, will know who is getting the trial medicine and who the placebo. All circumstances for both groups, except the medication, will be as nearly equal as possible.

At the close of the study, the results will be reviewed and collated statistically.

It all sounds quite simple, but it is anything but simple. Collecting a suitable number of appropriate patients in any one place is often a very serious difficulty. This has given rise to so-called joint studies, taking place simultaneously in widely separated research centres.

All the details and variables of the disease under study — the patients who are being treated and the observation of the results of medication and placebo — become a transaction of serious complexity.

Often the results as seen by one group of observers will differ from the view of others. And unfortunately, the press strides in whenever the situation becomes controversial and sensational headlines often become the critical circumstances of misunderstanding.

So the often equivocal art of treatment is being challenged by the emerging science of therapeutics.

Until a great deal more data can be gathered, we are going to have to put up with not knowing all we ought to know about diseases and the safety and effectiveness of many of the medicines we are using to treat them.

As you know, we love to get letters from you about your successes with plants along with your questions about failures or problems with others. Here's one of the "success" letters, so, as usual, we'll share it with you. It's from Mrs. B.M. in California, and says:

Dear Lynn and Joel:

I'd like to tell you about our rosebush out in the patio, we bought our home through probate — it was vacant for two ye[illegible] before we moved in. No one had been in the place, let alone cared for the patio. The ground was hard and overgrown with weeds, but I found this gnarled old rosebush and we decided to move it to a different area to make room for a concrete patio. The roots were so old and dry, they crumbled.

After being replanted and fed and watered the old bush blossomed. It was incredible — no one could believe it. Every time we cut one of its rich, dark roses, it is truly inspirational — a lesson in the will to live. I thought you'd enjoy hearing about it! — Mrs. B.M.

Dear Mrs. B.M.:

Ordinarily, we would have preferred to know exactly how much you had to do with the Return of the Rose. Such as how and where did you plant it? How often did you water, what and how much did you feed? But your letter was indeed so inspirational that we were inspired to print it despite its lack of some facts we still would like to know. Perhaps you might write us again and pass along your secrets to our readers. In the meantime, pin the next rose on yourself.

Of the many insect pests that attack Canada's forests, the most widespread and persistent is the spruce budworm. Every year it destroys hundreds of thousands of acres of valuable fir and spruce.

The illustrated four-page fact sheet "Spruce Budworm" points out that this small insect causes the severtst damage in New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia. In the Maritimes, Quebec and Ontario, the budworm now affects some 30 million acres of forest. In the prairies and British Columbia the damage it causes is less severe.

The fact sheet recounts the life cycle of the spruce budworm and draws attention to the control measures which are used. Chemical spraying is still the only effective means to minimize the number of budworms. Aricraft are used because of the vast regions to be sprayed and these make the operation expensive.

There is information for owners of small woodlots, or homes and cottages in budworm areas on how they can protect their trees.

Active ecumenist retiring after 43 years

One of Victoria's most active ecumenists, Rev. Gordon Walker, is retiring after 43 years in the Anglican ministry.

Last Sunday he conducted hist last service at St. David-by-the-Sea, Cordova Bay, where he had been since 1960.

He and his wife, Beatrice, can look back on many years of service to the church and to the community. Outreach into the community has been one of their chief concerns.

It was Walker who organized the first ecumenical service of worship in Victoria.

For many years, Walker's church and the United Church at Cordova Bay have worked together and the two churches are just beginning their summer program of shared services.

Walker's outreach in this area has included chaplaincy with correctional institutions, the conduct of human relations and communications workshops, programs on family life and worship on both a parish and general level, participation in religious courses at the University of Victoria, and the organization and operation of television programs for the Greater Victoria Council of Churches.

Mrs. Walker has been an active participant in church affairs, particularly in the music of the church and the work of the Altar Guild.

The Walkers came to Victoria 16 years ago from Winnipeg. At that time, in recognition of the many contributions to the church and community life there, the city council made Walker an honorary citizen of Winnipeg.

Walker was born in Halifax in 1909, a fourth-generation Canadian of Scottish and English ancestry. He moved to Winnipeg with his family and completed his elementary and secondary education there.

He graduated from the University of Manitoba with a BA in 1930 and was ordained in 1933 as a deacon following the earning of a licentiate in theology at St. John's College.

He was ordained as a priest in 1934 and served parishes in Cartwright, Belmont and Neepawa, Man.

He enlisted as an army chaplain in 1042 and served in Britain and Europe. He was mentioned in dispatches and decorated for meritorious service. He took discharge in 1946 as a major.

For the next 12 years he was rector of St. Thomas Anglican Church, Winnipeg. During that time he was diocesan representative for communications and broadcast a weekly two-hour radio program as well as organizing training courses for clergy interested in that medium.

When Walker responded to the call to Victoria he assumed responsibility for St. David's and St. Chad's. St. David's has since become a debt-free, self-supporting parish completely on its own.

In 1964, he was asked to be honorary chaplain of the Vancouver Island correctional centre on Wilkinson Road, and a year later he became the regular part-time chaplain.

He held this position for 10 years and then, because of provincial age regulations, transferred to the federal William Head institution and the Pandora community correctional centre.

Much of his work with these institutions has been in the field of family and personal counselling, an area of concern in which he has been involved in the community as well.

Each year in his parish and community he has organized and conducted at least one, generally two, human relations courses and workshops. Participants have come from most local Anglican and many other churches in Victoria and from the general community.

In 1969 Walker was nominated as a candidate for the office of bishop of the diocese.

In nominating him, John Lort of his congregation described him as a man who could make decisions, a man who understood people, cooperated with people of other faiths, was a good administrator and "a man in tune with the times."

Cordova Bay United Church held a reception for the Walkers two Sundays ago and presented them with luggage. Last Sunday the church council of St. David's also held a reception and gave the retiring couple a color television set.

Walker said this week that he was retiring from official church work but not from life. He will continue his association with the correctional chaplaincy and will be available to conduct short human relations and Biblical courses.

He and his wife will move from Cordova Bay and take up residence at 1655 Richardson.

The Voice of One

By REV. DR. FRANK S. MORLEY

Human society has changed more in the period since 1890 than in all the preceding centuries.

Listening to the Habitat experts one is convinced it wil change dramatically still more in the next 25 years, many fear for worse, others predict for better.

Buckminster Fuller, for example, believes that in 10 years all the world's peoples may enjoy a higher standard of living than the 1972 standard of the U.S. He scoffs at the notion of depletion of the world's resources.

Today 80 per cent of the world's copper is recycled and 70 per cent of production steel so "we're getting to the point where we don't have to take anything more out of the mines at all."

Think of the energy you would have if you could harness the wind and the sun. "One minute of one hurricane contains greater energy than the entire stockpiles of atomic bombs of the U.S. and the Soviet Union," he said.

Fuller considers war now "obsolete." James Schlesinger, however, points out that since 1960 Soviet military manpower grew from three to 4.4 million men, more than twice the American military establishment.

While the Soviet fleet has grown to overwhelming strength, the American fleet has been sadly depleted, down from 976 ships in 1968 to 483 ships this year and many of them in pitiful condition.

The Soviet airforce has spectacularly increased also. If peace depends on a balance of power, there is little hope. Indeed the situation is comparable to the disarmament of Britain and the West during the 30s when the Nazi hordes swept down on almost defenceeless countries.

Canada has made the very dubious decision to depend on the Americans to defend this country. The imbalance of power led Arthur Krock to confess in his memoirs that he had a visceral fear that "the tenure of the U.S. as the first power in the world may be one of the briefest in history."

A basic hope of Habitat, of course, is for peace and goodwill. Instead of a search for deadlier weapons, Habitat wants a search for pure water.

While the Thames contains fish once more, the Seine, the Danube, and the Rhine are filthy.

Russia has a massive cleanup program for her great waterways, the Volga and the Ural. The U.S. situation is approaching desperation, while Canada makes feeble efforts to prevent pollution and depletion. So a billion people do not have access to clean water.

No conference is complete without population explosion alarm. Black Africa has the highest rate of population growth in the world. Abidjan in 1945 was a sleepy town of 20,000, but today has 500,000 population and it is predicted it will reach a million by 1980.

A UN study predicts that the total population of Black Africa will jump from its present 242 million to 303 million by 1980, and 525 million by 2000. It describes the urban growth as "exploding cities in unexploding economies.

A Western expert says that "some of these counties aren't developing at all. They're going backward."

Lady Jackson's contention that improved conditions will produce a decline in the birth rate is hard to swallow. Many millions of dollars of foreign aid have been pumped into Africa with little effect.

By 2075, the underdeveloped nations of Latin America, southern Asia and Africa could have a population of 40 billion.

Habitat confirms Arnold Toynbee's thesis that the developed nations are going to find themselves in a permanent state of siege. Agricultural expert Lester Brown states that the world is divided into those who consume 2,000 pounds of grain a year and those who must get by on 400 pounds.

Fuller is one of the few optimists. C.P. Snow gloomily says, "We've seen the best of the game."

Others see the pollution crisis, the population explosion, the inflationary spiral of money, the famine peril, the oil crisis and the threat of nuclear war driving mankind to desperation.

Anthropologist Margaret Mead stated the problem most clearly and forcibly. Communities are being designed by bloodless experts that do not meet community needs.

Dr. Mead stated, "We stand to lose our sense of beauty. We must build with style and quality that nourish that sense. We must protect the world against the imposition of harsh, mechanical standards from one part of the world to others."

She saw poor old people being stacked in warehouses and rich old people in golden ghettoes.

"We are stratifying and separating people; grandparents and grandchildren are being separated, as are people from different income levels."

She was making a cry for humanity and compassion, but unlike some others who appealed for "Love," she made concrete proposals. It is good to know that she belongs to the optimistic minority.

Island Catholics gather June 27

Sign of unity with 41st Eucharistic Congress in Philadelphia in August

As many as 5,000 Roman Catholics from Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands are expected at a eucharistic celebration in Memorial Arena the afternoon of Sunday, June 27.

The celebration has been arranged as a sign of unity Congress in Philadelphia in August and with the universal Roman Catholic Church.

"We are a pilgrim people, a pilgrim church," Rev. Bernard Hanley, chairman of the committee arranging the evens, said of the celbration.

"All of us cannot make the journey to Rome or even to Philadelphia for the eucharistic congress in August. Therefore, Bishop Remi De Roo has arranged this celebration as a sign of our unity with the congress and with the universal Roman Catholic Church. This sign is the gathering of the people of the diocese around their bishop and their priests at the eucharist."

The Victoria celebration originally was to have been held in the Beban Park recreation centres in Nanaimo but, due to the labor situation, its availability was uncertain and Memorial Arena now is the location.

The event will begin with a procession at the arena at 1 p.m. The eucharist will follow. Participants are being urged to bring picnic lunches to eat after the mass, which will be over by 3 p.m.

Cultural and ethnic groups were to have put on a special program but, because of time lost in relocating the event, this was eliminated.

However, individuals and groups have been invited to wear their native dress to symbolize the diverse cultures in the international church.

The priests of the diocese, which includes Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands, will be concelebrating with the bishop. Guest homilist will be Bishop Emmett Doyle of Nelson.

In Philadelphia at the 41st congress from Aug. 1 to 8 more than one million people are expected. It will be the first time the world-wide spiritual assembly has been held in North America in 50 years.

Health permitting, Pope Paul will attend.

The congress will draw people from every walk of life and from many religions. A special committee will deal with participation of Christians of other churches.

Heading this group will be the Episcopal bishop of the U.S., the president of the Lutheran Church in America and the primate of the Greek Orthodox Church of North and South America.

Armenians, Maronites, Melkites, Ruthenians and Ukrainians will participate and concelebrate an Eastern Rites liturgy.

The congress is a gathering of the universal church for the purpose of deepening understanding of the holy eucharist enriching the love for Christ in the eucharist, fostering devotion to the holy eucharist and providing an opportunity to proclaim the Good News of the eucharist to the human family throughout the world.

Theme of the congress, as announced by Pope Paul, is The Eucharist and the Hungers of the Human Family. Each of the eight days will focus on a different aspect of the hungers theme.

Sub-themes are defined as the hunger for God, for bread, for freedom and justice, for the Spirit, for truth, for understanding, for peace and for Jesus, the Bread of life.

One of the main speakers will be Leon-Joseph Cardinal Suenens, Archbishop of Malines-Brussels in Belgium. Suenens is one of the most progessive voices in the Catholic hierarchy today.

In addition to theological and liturgical meetings there will be a series of more than 100 afternoon and evening performances of symphony, ballet, mime and musicals.

These will include six world premieres which, according to Rev. Louis D'Addezio, co-ordinator of performing arts for the congress, will reinforce the spirtual themes.

Among the artists appearing will be Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia orchestra, soprano Benita Valente, Helen Hayes, Ella Fitzgerald, Dave Brubeck, The Dance Theatre of Harlem, The Demeans and The Cantate Domino, a boys' choir from Belgium.

Co-ordinator D'Addezio says that all of our performing arts can be traced back to primitive religious ceremonies and dances.

"We have literally taken the 150th Psalm of David, which exhorts us to praise God on Cymbals and harps in song and dance, and given it special meaning in the performing arts section of the congress," he said.

In addition to activities at the congress, those attending will have an opportunity to take part in the American Bicentennial celebration which will be at its height at the time.

Bishop De Roo is leading a group of people from Vancouver Island to the congress. There are places for 32 and there are still a few vacancies.

Father Hanley, 745 West Burnside, phone 479-5860, has further information.

Baptists going camping

The day camping program of Emmanuel Baptist Church will begin July 6 for children who have completed Grades 1 to 5.

Children taking part will gather at the church at 2121 Cedar Hill Cross Road at 9 a.m. four days a week, Tuesday through Friday.

They will be taken to the Saanichton fairgrounds and returned each day at 3 p.m. Fridays will be spent on special trips called mystery day excursions.

The camping is based on an Indian theme and will include hikes through the woods, crafts and religious instruction. Children will take bag lunches. A doctor will always be on call.

Cost is $5 per camper per week. Full fees must be paid on registration.

The camp will be operated each week starting July 6 with the last camp starting Aug. 24. There will be no session the week of Aug 3.

Information is available from Terry Brown at the church office, 592-2418.

New rector takes over

New rector of the Anglican parish of View Royal is Rev. John Baker, ordained recently after a long ministry in the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ). Early next month he will take charge of the parish, which comprises All Saints' and St. Columba's.

Centre to host summer courses

Summer courses at the Anglican Church's Sorrento Centre on Shuswap Lake begin June 27 and will continue through Sept. 4.

The centre is a small community where individuals and groups have the opportunity, not only to consider, but also to experience the dynamic process of human growth and development.

The community is guided and challenged by a motto taken from the writings of Ignatius — "The greatest glory of God is man, fully human and fully alive."

The centre began as a lay training centre 13 years ago under the sponsorship of the B.C. provincial synod of the Anglican Church of Canada. It was renamed the Sorrento Centre for Human Development in 1971.

The centre now operates all year round and offers ecucational and growth-oriented programs aimed at developing personal, social and religious awareness.

There are programs for clergy and for lay people, for couples and families and individuals.

Program directors are Rev. Charles Griggs, formerly of Winnipeg, and Sister Margaret Rowe who went to Sorrento from Nanaimo.

Sister Margaret, formerly an Australian Carmelite nun, came to Vancouver Island in 1969 to set up an experimental community. Her aim was to help the lonely and bedridden, to involve people working with her in the mainstream of community life while permitting them to maintain a life of prayer and contemplation.

Courses planned for this summer: June 27 to July 3 — a time of spirituality for 13-to-15-year olds. July 3 to 10 — Christian Mission Today, led by Bichop Edward Scott, primate of the Anglican Church of Canada.

July 10 to 17 — Let's Discover the Bible, led by Bishop Ralph Dean, former Bishop of Cariboo. July 17 to 24 — Parent Effectiveness Training, led by Jim Clark, an associate of Sorrento and a teacher in Burnaby.

July 24 to 31 — The Parish as Christian Community, led by Rev. Bern and Pauline Barrett, formerly of Trail and Edmonton and now of Richmond Hill, Ont.

July 31 to Aug. 7 — Faith and Art, led by Rev. Bob Webster of Chase, B.C., Aug. 7 to 14 — More Joy Through Growth, led by Rev. Bill and Connie Porter of Calgary.

Aug. 14 to 21 — Contemporary Spirituality, led by Rev. Jim Cruickshank of the Vancouver School of Theology. Aug. 21 to 28 — Open Week; no specific program.

Aug. 28 to Sept. 4 — Senior Youth Encounter, for youths 16 and over, led by Rev. Phil Thatcher, St. Simon's, Deep Cove.

Further information is available at Sorrento Centre, P.O. Box 99, Sorrento, B.C. VOE 2WO.

1,000 attend pilgrimage

CHATHAM, Ont. — About 1,000 people from Canada and the United States participated in the annual pilgrimage to St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church.

The event attracted many people of Czechoslovakian descent and featured religious services, gourmet food and Czechoslovakian dancing.

St. Anthony is the patron saint of immigrants.

BRANTFORD, Ont. — A three-day religious gathering, Jesus '76, is being held this weekend at Brant Park.

About 3,000 persons opened the meeting Thursday by praising the Lord in unison. Organizers say they expect 15,000 persons to attend.

The conference is being sponsored by Prias Inc. of Canada and its U.S. counterpart, Jesus Ministries.

HONEY HARBOUR, Ont. — About 350 Ontario laymen of the United Church of Canada are attending the 24th annual conference to be held this weekend.

"The purpose of the conference is to deepen the spiritual experience of the laymen of the church and to challenge them to more effective service as Christians," said Don Smith of United Church national staff.

Honey Harbour is about 30 miles north of Barrie.

KINGSTON, Ont. — Eight members of the arch-diocese of Kingston were honored by Pope Paul VI on the occasion of the 150th anniversary of the diocese.

Rev. J. G. Hanley, vicar-general of the archdiocese, was granted the ecclesiatical rank of protonotary apostolic, the highest rank of monsignori in the Roman Catholic Church.

Michael W. Carty of Kingston and Mrs. Lillian O'Connor of Marmora, Ont., were both awarded the Cross Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice for the church and pope.

Sister Helena Pickett, Lt. Col. Louis J. Flynn, Mrs. Herbert Brown, John B. MacLean and Gelindo De Re were presented with Benemerenti medals. Benemerenti means well-deserved honor.

Gospel services to be in open air

The 34th year of open-air gospel services in Beacon Hill Park, which began last weekend, will continue at 7 p.m. Sunday with the Shantymen's Christian Association in charge.

The Shantymen's Vancouver Island superintendent, Roy Getman, will give the gospel message.

The service will take the form of witness in which testimonies of Christian faith will be given by several young people.

Chet McArthur will tell of the work started last summer by him and the crew of the association's new motor vessel for the extension of operations northerly from Lund. Missionary service was provided on the Mainland coastal area up to Prince Rupert and beyond, as far as the Alaskan border.

Mrs. Joan McKee of Pachena will be song leader Sunday night. The services, sponsored by Park Services Interdenominational, will be held at the Cameron bandshell in the park each Sunday 'till the end of August.

More than 500 people attended the first service of the season last Sunday.

Following services will be conducted by the Salvation Army's Victoria Citadel Corps, Free Methodist and Parkdale Evangelical Free Church, Victoria Alliance and Victoria Chinese Alliance Churches, Apostolic Church of Canada, Central Baptist, First and Esquimalt Churches of the Nazarene, The Gideons, Glad Tidings Pentecostal Church, St. Andrew's Presbyterian and Gosworth Road Community Church.

Victorian to travel on mission

Robert Bruce Kite of Victoria is one of 26 members of the Victoria Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints who are on proselytizing missions.

Kite, a science major at the University of Victoria, will carry out his mission in Louisville, Ky., for the next two years.

A native of Winnipeg, he was raised in Belleville and Ottawa and came to the West Coast within the past two years.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological forecast for Sunday, June 20

By Sydney Omarr

ARIES (March 2-April 9): Accent on significant changes, contributions, ability to make known your views in forceful, creative manner. Gemini, Virgo figure prominently. Cycle is such that you make a decision which irritates some, but launches you as an individual of integrity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pace slows enough for you to open better rapport with family. You're able to impove services, products—you review, revise, tear down for purpose of rebuilding. Libra is very much in picture, Question of debt, carry-over charges will be resolved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ability to react well under pressure comes to forefront. You perceive sham—you select the "real thing." Know your capabilities and live up to them. You get rid of some fantasies. Replace them with working concepts, viable goals, programs. You'll comprehend!

CANCER (June 2-July 22): You find where you're going, where you now stand, how to advance postion. Some decisions now are not "easy to make—but you learn about organization. Accept added responsibility. Push ahead with knowledge that law, authority, one you look up to, support you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Communications might be disrupted. Be sure you are correctly quoted. Also, check reservations, long-distance travel plans. Language barrier is overcome if you let go of preconceived notions. Added recognition is due.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New approach should be made in connection with budget, financial arrangements. Someone wants more than their share—from you. Protect your own interests. Draw line and hold tight to position. You can win!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lie low—gain indicated if you observe, gather data. Don't rush, especially where partnership, legal affairs are concerned. Aquarian could be in picture. Test waters—you may want additional facts. Correct past mistake—even if you have to admit you were wrong.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Diversify. Be versatile, willing to experiment. Gemini, Sagittarius figure prominently. Emphasis on work, health, ability to delve behind scenes and come up with story that is yet untold. Do something to lend cheer to "handicapped' friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emotions could dominate logic, Know it and be wary of impulsive actions. Friend acts in "unusual" manner. Be patient; don't cast first stone. What now appears improbable may actually have more solid foundation than is apparent.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stress change, ability to analyze, to piece together bits of informational clues. Yes, it's time for some detective work! Accent home base, property, instability of status quo. Gemini, Virgo persons figure in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Stick to familiar ground. Too many journeys now invite difficulty. Hold off on finalizing ideas, concepts. Be receptive to pleas of family. Key is to be diplomatic. By giving a little, you could gain much.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your sensitivity, rescience surges forward. You are able now to get to heart of matters. Follow through on "inner voice." Spotlight on money, how to keep what you have and get the most from assets. Protect possessions!

IF JUNE 20th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, restless, emotional, have digestive problems, are protective of family interests. In October, roadblock is removed—life will be more full; you'll be more active and happier. Cancer, Capricorn individuals play important roles in your life. If single, marriage is upcoming. Married or single, get ready for travel!

Monday, June 21

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Home adustment, beautifying of surroundings, reconciliation with family member—these are spotlighted. Cycle is at peak. You can get what you want—know it and act accordingly. Make personal appearances.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Descretion now is key; maintain air of mystery. To tell all would be an error. You've been trusted with "inside information." Keep confidences. You may be visiting hospital, club, institution. Pisces, Virgo figure in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on friends, desires, professional advancement. Popularity increases. You're able now to assume more responsibility. On personal level, you communicate—a relationship intensifies. If you're playing games with emotions—think twice!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on goal, dealing with parent or authority figure. You complete cycle; task is finished and a relationship may also be wearing thin. Instead of brooding, look to future. It is brighter than you may think-

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Good Moon aspect highlights journey, education, breaking new ground, communication and publishing. Submit format, manuscript. Make fresh start. Open heart to "new love." Vitality makes comeback. A bright, optimistic member of opposite sex could be very much in picture

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What was a roadblock to progress is being removed. Be aware of it and be confident. Money, as it affects partner, mate, is featured. Dig deep; reject superficial explanations. You're entitled to legitimate tax writeoff.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stress ability to move here, there, everywhere. Means put off any direct confrontation. Accent on legal papers, commitment, marriage. Take time—play waiting game. Cycle is low—judgment may not be as sharp as usual.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight work, health, ability to get together with those who share mutual interests. Individual who has data, files you can use is willing to share. Toss aside false pride. Much that you worked for is now available. Make reasonable inquiries.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Lunar aspect indicates creativity, significant reappraisal of life style. You're able to imprint individuality; personal magnetism sparkles. Members of opposite sex comment on your "charisma." Gemini is in picture—and so is another Sagittarian.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Build on solid foundation. Improve property. Strive for greater understanding within family circle. Get value for value. Be realistic about what you're doing, striving for—Taurus, Libra figure prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Some ideas need "development time." Check various sources. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Ask questions—answers are available. Relative who appears confident could be putting on a show. Know it and depend upon your own resources.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Financial status improves. You're able to locate lost article. Capricorn, Cancer could be in picture. Get prices. Know values. Take cash and let credit go. Spotlight on payment, collection, ability to exercise authority in intelligent manner.

IF JUNE 21st IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are optimistic, expansive, eat too much "junk food." Weight can be a problem. December will be an outstanding month. The year is vital; changes in life style occur. If single, you could marry. Gemini, Sagittarius persons play important roles in your life. You are popular and your laughther is infectious.

Rising Tide Of Protection For Estuaries

By HUMPHREY DAVY
Times Staff

Citizen groups from Campbell to Sooke are fighting to save the fisheries and recreational resources of seven major river estuaries on the Island's east coast threatened with partial and total extinction.

The growing public concern for estuary environment — a primary resource area for fish stocks, wildlife and recreational facilities — is the result of several special federal environmental studies of the Island's coastal zone.

the stulies blame pollution from domestic sewage, pulp mill waste, logging, log handling and storage, shipping and the filling of salt water marshes for industrial development for the steady deterioration of the estuaries.

Value of endangered resources is estimated to be well over $50 million annually by some fisheries experts.

The studies do not include the scores of creeks which have been damaged, some permanently, over the years.

River estuaries listed as facing a slow death are the Sooke, Koksilah, Cowichan, Chemainus, Nanaimo, English and Oyster.

Environmental groups, including regional districts, claim much of the damage to the rivers and estuaries could have been averted with some planning and effective pollution control legislation.

Problems facing the river estuaries are much the same. The floor of Sooke Bay is already polluted with logging debris and now there is pressure on to establish a large subdivision, plus a commercial development along river's banks and tributaries.

The problems of the Koksilah are similar.

The pollution facing the Cowichan estuary — one of the island's most important fish rearing areas, is more serious. A report by federal biologists Leonard M. Bell and Ronald J. Kallman show its environment is steadily being downgraded.

Bell-Kallman note that the latest development has been the filling in of portions of extremely productive water courses draining the Cowichan Bay salt marsh.

The landfill carried out by Doman Industries Ltd., the report points out, "is very detrimental to the fish and wildlife utilizing the estuary."

"Besides the permanent loss of the natural, highly productive salt marsh, leachates from the fill adversely affect water quality in the area and will continue to do so unless corrective measures are taken," they state.

The Chemainus River estuary so far has escaped major industrial or urban development and this is one area citizen groups hope to have set aside as an ecological reserve.

But the federal reports points out that Chemainus harbor and nearby Ladysmith harbor are already rather badly degraded owing to wpod wastes from sawmills and log storage.

Industrial pollution threatens Nanaimo river estuary while proposed residential and commercial development along the Englishman's river and estuary may bring about the same problem.

Englishman could definitely be saved by government action, according to regional district officials and environmental groups.

Pollution from a proposed marina and a large subdivision is the concern of environmentalists for Oyster River estuary — a big producer of fish.

Howard English, an advisor to the International salmon commission, said industry and fisheries can co-exist with "planning" and a little more care in the choice of industrial sites.

"Industry wants to use estuaries for its work because it's cheaper to develop," he noted. "But what about the loss of the other resources — the loss of jobs."

"The value of other resources in the past have been completely ignored," he said.

As an example, he pointed out the value of fisheries to B.C. commercial fishermen is $101 million annually.

"Preliminary estimates also show that the value of the fisheries to sport fishermen is $95 million," he said.

"The fundamental cause of the excessive environmental damage that often results from natural resource extraction is that these costs are not "priced" by the market and this does not enter the cost benefit analysis of private corporations to whom most of the benefits accrue," he said.

Bill Otoway, executive director of B.C. Wildlife Federation, said the problem of river estuary systems could be solved if the government institute a co-ordinate resource management planning system.

"This system has been implemented for grazing lands," he said. "It could be applied to estuaries."

Weddings

Blakley-Jensen

A pretty double-ring wedding was solemnized on May 8, 1976, at 2 p.m. in First United Church when Marcia Louise, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jensen, exchanged marriage vows with Brent George, only son of Mr. and Mrs. George Blakley. Rev. Hugh Hunter officiated. During the signing of the Register, Corrinne Duval played the organ. The church was beautifully decorated with large standards of white gladiolus and yellow disbud mums. The guest pews were marked with yellow daisies and yellow ribbon.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was radiant in an elegant wedding gown of silk organza over taffeta. The fitted bodice was fashioned with a deep band at the waist. A sheer yoke with a high neckline was lavishly adorned with re-embroidered lace. The full bishop sleeves were cuffed with matching lace. A deep lace flounce bordered the softly A-lined skirt. A cathedral veil of silk illusion which belonged to her sister, misted from a face framing cap of lace embroidered with pearls. The bride's jewellery consisted of a gold chain and drop pearl necklace belonging to her mother and pearl stud earrings, a gift of the groom. She carried a cascading bouquet of white roses, baby's breath, stephanotis and fern. The bride was attended by her sister, Mrs. Valerie Bion, matron of honour and attendants, Mrs. Kim Prowse and Miss Debbie Caddell. They were attired in identical formal gowns of dotted Swiss nylon in chartreuse green, fashioned and styled with long full sleeves, square necklines and tiered skirts. Matching picture hats encircled with daisies complemented their gowns. They each carried crescent shaped bouquets of yellow daisies. Mr. George Porter was best man, and the ushers were Messrs. Ted Baker, Jessie Vowles and Ken Jensen, brother of the bride. Mother of the bride chose a two-piece, floor-length ensemble in yellow organza with orange and green floral design, and wore a white orchid corsage. Mother of the groom wore a formal gown of pink silk jersey with fitted waist and high neckline appliqued with pearls and sequins. Her corsage consisted of pink roses, lily of the valley and pink ribbon.

The reception was held at the Racquet Club of Victoria, where Mr. William Jensen, uncle of the bride, proposed the toast. The three-tiered wedding cake was tastefully decorated with white doves and bells. Music for dancing was supplied by Denny's Canned Music. For her going away outfit, the new Mrs. Blakley wore a pale green knitted and crocheted empire waisted dress with a yellow orchid corsage.

Following the reception, the happy couple left on their honeymoon to Harrison Hot Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Brent Blakley are now residing in ther new home at Glen Lake.

Out of town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Don Mackay and daughter Judy of Burnaby; Mr. and Mrs. B. Benham, Courtenay; Mr. and Mrs. G. Connack, Vancouver; Mr. Vic Swift and Miss Jill Frost, Kamloops; Mr. C. Graham and Susan Bowes, Prince George; Mrs. Jack Blakley, Courtenay; Mr. and Mrs. Ray Fontana, Campbell River, and Mr and Mrs. W. Abbott, Vancouver.

Hagstrom-Beckerley

St. John's Anglican Church on Quadra Street, was the scene of a beautiful double-ring ceremony at 7 p.m. on Saturday, May 15, 1976, when Deborah Elaine, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alan E. Beckerley, Victoria, B.C., became the bride of David Lewis Hagstrom, only son of Mr. J. Hagstrom, of Port Alice, B.C. and Mrs. J. Hawthorne of Victoria, B.C. Picturesque standards of yellow and white gladiolus, mums, daisies and baby's breath decorated the church where the marriage vows were solemnized by Canon Grahame Baker.

Given in marriage by her parents, the bride was a vision of loveliness in her wedding gown of silk sheer and Chantilly Lace. The gown was designed with a high stand-up collar and fitted bodice with lace forming a V-design cascading down gown's front and side skirt and all around the long full train which fell softly from the shoulders. Again the lovely lace was repeated on the sheer Bishop styled sleeves that featured deep lace cuffs. Touches of mother of pearl glitter shimmered from the lace throughout the gown. A lace halo held a long cathedral veil of silk illusion tulle edged in the same lovely Chantilly Lace and she carried a delicate colonial bouquet of yellow roses and baby's breath. The bride was attended by her cousin, Maureen Paget as maid of honour, and Patty Hagstrom, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid. Nancy and Teresa Graham, cousins of the bride, were junior bridesmaid and flower-girl respectively. All wore identical gowns of pale yellow flocked nylon marquisette over taffeta. The bridesmaids carried dainty colonial bouquets of yellow and white daisies and baby's breath while the little flower girl carried a basket of the same flowers. The groom chose Victor Teng as best man and Manjeet Ghag and Jim Beckerley, brother of the bride, ushered the guests. They were all attired in sky blue tuxedos with white ruffled shirts. The groom's boutonniere matched the bride's bouquet. The mother of the bride wore a soft coral polyester silk gown and chose a white orchid corsage. The mother of the groom chose a sky blue gown and cape, and wore a pink orchid.

A reception was held in the Georgian Lounge at the Empress Hotel, where Mr. Richard Graham, uncle of the bride proposed the toast. After a delightful buffet dinner, dancing commenced, with music supplied for the evening by Denny's Canned Music.

After the reception, the happy couple left for a honeymoon trip to Hawaii. For her going away outfit, Debbie chose a two-piece coral suit with white accessories and a corsage of baby coral rosebuds. Mr. and Mrs. Hagstrom are now residing in Victoria.

Calwell-Ferguson

St. John's Anglican Church, Courtenay, was the setting of a double-ring ceremony at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday, April 3, 1976, when Judy Anne, daughter of Mrs. Eva Ferguson, became the bride of Walter William Calwell of Victoria. Archdeacon E. H. Maddocks of Victoria officiated. The church was decorated with spring flowers, pale blue and yellow pew markers of forget-me-nots on blue bows.

The bride, given in marriage by her brother, Don Ferguson, wore a floor-length gown of pale blue chiffon, princess style, featuring full-skirt with Austrian ruffle. Original headpiece was pale blue draped chiffon with arrangement of chiffon roses accented with rhinestones. She wore a gold cross, a gift from the groom, and carried a Bible topped with yellow roses. Matrons of honour: Alfreda Walsh and sister-in-law Jacquie Ferguson; bridesmaids: nieces Mary and Barbara Ferguson, were attired in identical white floor-length gowns with matching capes and pale blue accessories. Ringbearer was David Ferguson, nephew of the bride. Best man was Roy McMinn, and ushers were John Forbes and Harry Mobey.

A reception was held at Upper Legion Hall, Courtenay. The mother of the bride wore a teal blue ensemble consisting of floor-length gown with matching jacket, white accessories and a corsage of pink roses. M. C. Bud Walsh proposed the toast to the bride and Roy McMinn a toast to the groom. Following the reception, the couple left on a wedding trip to Southern California. For her going away outfit, the bride chose a beige suit and red accessories.

Out of town guests were the bride's aunt Mrs. Taylor, Truro, N.S.: friends and relatives from Vancouver and Victoria.

Harper-Edwards

The marriage is announced with pleasure of JoAnne Lynn Edwards to Kenneth Raymond Harper, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond H. Harper, Victoria. The double-ring ceremony took place on Saturday, May 29, 1976 in St. Mark's Anglican Church with Rev. Peter Isles officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Harry Chatten, who also proposed the toast to the bride. She was attended by Miss Judith Harper and Mrs. Jennette Chatten. Mr. Chris De Gane acted as best man with Mr. David Lederhaus as usher.

A reception followed at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Harper.

The bride and groom are now residing up-Island.

Galloway-Hammerer

Gordon Head United Church was the setting for the recent double-ring ceremony uniting in marriage Cindy Lee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hammerer, and Daniel Gilbert, son of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Galloway.

Given in marriage by her mother and father, the bride was radiant in a floor-length gown of polyester. It featured a Victorian neckline, full-length sleeves, and a train edged with lace. She wore a shoulder-length veil and carried a cascading bouquet of pink rosebuds and stephanotis backed with ivy. Miss Alison Muth served as maid of honour, and the bride's sister Miss Debbie Hammerer, as bridesmaid. Both were attired in gowns of pale pink dotted Swiss over taffeta. They wore jade pendants, gifts of the bride, and carried bouquets of white daisies, pink carnations and baby's breath. Mr. David Galloway, brother of the groom, served as best man. Ushers for the occasion were Mr. Gordon Monk and Mr. Gary Little. The best man and ushers wore grey suits and white shirts. The groom wore a light blue blazer with navy vest and pants. The mother of the bride wore a full-length, pink chiffon gown and a corsage of pink rosebuds. Mrs. Galloway wore a full-length, blue polyester dress and a corsage of yellow orchids.

The reception was held at the Oak Bay Beach Hotel. The three-tiered wedding cake was made by the bride's grandmother and was decorated with red rosebuds. Mr. Morris Alger, uncle of the bride, acted as master of ceremonies and proposed the toast to the bride. A toast to the bridesmaids was proposed by the best man. Cindy and Dan, after thanking their parents for all that had been done for them, asked the guests to join them in a toast to their parents.

Following a honeymoon to points in the Interior, Mr. and Mrs. Galloway are residing in Victoria.

INTERIORS
Decorate with a difference. We feature turn-of-the-century restored furnishings from our own past with a charm and uniqueness all their own. A super set of solid oak press-back chairs and table to go with. Elegant antique oak bevelled mirrors. Quilts in calico. We are now offering the most delightful pieces of reproduction, early Canadian furniture, that show true craftsmanship and build. Lovely hand-turned, wooden rocker, made of local wood, so beautiful it must be seen to be appreciated. Many more pieces to furnish your "castle" with. All charming yet inexpensive 1109 Catherine, 382-1789.

Oft and again, a leaf blown
by the wind

Falls on the broad ocean

'Tis never lost; where'er it
fate may blow,

The imprint of its settling's
left behind.

And so with every life,
whate'er its kind,

It shapes itself a place,
'tis destined so,

If hence in peace or turmoil
it should go,

Its influence ever lives,

Crucial Moment For Spacecraft

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The crucial moment approached today for the Viking spacecraft to hit its brakes and swing into orbit around Mars, from where it will scan the surface for possible hazards at its July 4 landing site.

Late Friday night the speeding probe received its orders from earth, leaving it up to a computer on board to guide Viking through the crucial manoeuvre.

Mission Director Tom Young described it as a "one-time opportunity" for the Viking, launched 10 months ago, to achieve orbit. Though considered highly unlikely, a failure at this point might send the robot craft hurtling past the planet into oblivion.

Today's manoeuvre, requiring the craft to complete precise twists and rolls, was to begin with a 40-minute burst from its rocket motor. The braking effect of the firing was to slow the Viking by about 2,454 miles an hour.

The pull of Martian gravity would then curve the craft's path into an orbit. Viking would then circle the planet in 42½ hours with an orbit ranging from 31,440 miles above the planet's surface to within 932 miles of the planet.

Another rocket firing Monday is scheduled to reduce the orbit to 24.6 hours—the length of a Martian day—and powerful cameras are to begin studying the landing area at the mouth of a huge gorge. If it appears too inhospitable, an alternate site will be used.

Project officials said the two-piece spacecraft was in excellent shape and was transmitting back to earth "spectacular" pictures of Mars. The Viking orbiter will whirl around the planet while the landing unit—an automated biological laboratory—detaches itself and descends to the surface.

Photographs taken by the spacecraft as it closed on Mars showed an unexpected haze believed to be clouds of ice crystals. The planet's surface appeared to have more color variations than seen in pictures taken by other spacecraft, and a towering volcanic mountain discovered five years ago seems to have changed in some way, scientists said Friday. They said patterns of light and shadow on the mountain and its contours appear to have changed.

ACCESS LIMITED

BROCKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — School trustees will be limited access to school board records and invoices if the Leeds and Grenville County board of education approves a proposal by the policy committee.

Ronald Boyd, local representative of the Ontario Public School Men Teachers Federation said statements taken out of context about teachers could be damaging.

LEGAL FIGHT OVER BEAVER

FORT FRANCES, Ont. (CP) — This town may soon be embroiled in a legal battle with the Organizing Committee for the 1976 Olympic Games over its beaver symbol, the town's registered trademark since 1971.

The committee has been told it may use the symbol if it pays the town $10,000 and any legal costs the town encounters in the matter.

Sign Language Not Needed By These Deaf Children

OTTAWA (CP) — Joel Lemay is an energetic, bright-eyed child with red cheeks and soft blonde hair. Now almost three, he has been deaf since he contracted meningitis at 11 months.

Joel has been enrolled in the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario for a year's auditory training. The program teaches deaf children how to speak.

Dr. Andree Smith, chief of the hospital's audiology department said: "If children's hearing defects are detected early, they can be trained and integrated into a normal school setting. Properly trained children don't need to learn sign language."

No sign language or lip reading is taught at the hospital.

To be successful, Dr. Smith said, training must usually begin before a child's language processes are developed, within the first two years.

The aim of the program, which began a year ago, is to keep deaf children in their homes with their parents and to keep them in regular schools, said Judy Simser, hearing therapist in the audiology department.

Through the auditory method, "deaf children can talk to the world, not only to people who know sign language."

The children's hospital program is for congenitally deaf children and for those who become deaf before learning to talk. Only children whose deafness is so severe that hearing and speech would be impossible without hearing aids are enrolled.

Joel wears two hearing devices on his chest in a leather harness over his clothing. He may get a Phonic Ear, which is an FM amplification system.

A deaf child trained by the auditory approach and wearing the Phonic Ear unit can be integrated into a normal school setting. The teacher must wear a Phonic Ear system microphone, which enables the child to hear her up to a range of 200 feet.

Joel could not speak when he began his sessions. He now knows more than 20 words. His parents are French-speaking so Mrs. Simser conducts her sessions with him in French.

Dr. Smith said the children are taught to "discriminate sounds through play and conditioning."

Joel was first taught to discriminate between presence and absence of sound. Mrs Simser now works with him on non-verbal sounds.

The program, said Mrs. Simser, teaches the deaf child to "comprehend language, then to imitate, then to say phrases spontaneously."

Weekly sessions with the therapist are only a small part of the training program, Dr. Smith said. 'One hour a week does not work. It is a full-time job for parents at home."

Indian Students Get A Second Chance

VANCOUVER (CP) — A re-evaluation of the native law program at the University of British Columbia could result in conditional passes for Indian students who failed their first year examinations.

Drew Schroeder, a law professor and co-ordinator of the native students' program, said Friday a "serious evaluation" will involve meetings with the students and the law faculty.

Among the subjects to be discussed is a proposal made by the students involved at a meeting with him Thursday that they enter second-year courses on a qualifying basis, with further exams to be written during the term.

Four native students wrote the examinations and all failed, Rosemary Brown (NDP — Vancouver Burrard) complained in the legislature last week.

She asked for an investigation of complaints by the students that, because of differing educational backgrounds, they failed at examination writing, not comprehension.

Law dean A. J. McClean said the faculty would give sympathetic consideration to representations by the students.

Schroeder said the meeting Thursday was an exchange of information on both sides and that continuing evaluation will be made of weaknesses in the program and the request of the students for promotion.

The native law program was instituted at the university last year on recommendation of the native task force of the justice development commission.

Oak Bay Lions Elect Ackerman

Dave Ackerman has been elected president of Oak Bay Lions Club for the 1976-77 term.

He was installed with other officers at a ceremony conducted by past zone chairman Lou Hamelin. The others were past-president Jim Barnes, vice-presidents Jim O'Neill, John Andersen and Jim Ward, secretary Terry L'Ami, treasurer John Currie, Lion tamer Ken Harrison, tail twister Nick Melnechuk and directors Larry Kirkham, Ben Smith, Norman Bamford, Les Bayliss, John Reeves and Arthur Lambrick.

Fall Victim Identified

City police today identified the man who fell or jumped to his death at Royal Jubilee Hospital Friday as Carrol Olson, 60, of 904-B Admirals Rd, in Esquimalt.

An inquest will be held but no date has been set, a police spokesman said.

The hospital said Friday the man fell from a window on the fourth floor of the hospital's south block about 6:30 a.m.

Police said the patient had been the subject of considerable medical treatment during Thursday night and early Friday.

Economic Council Members

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau announced Friday the appointment of two members to the economic council of Canada and the reappointment of two others.

The new members are Reverend Gerard Dion, Quebec City, past president of the Canadian Industrial Relations Institute and the editor of a quarterly magazine on industrial relations, and Yolande Laviolette, Montreal, a research counsellor of the Quebec Federation of Caisses Populaires Desjardins.

Re-appointed were Raymond Primeau, Montreal, past vice-president and general manager of La Banque Provinciale du Canada, and S. Robert Blair, Calgary, president and chief executive officer of the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Co. Ltd.

Appointments to the 35-member council are for three-year terms.

The council is a Crown corporation that acts as an adviser to government and economic bodies about the longer term developments in the Canadian economy.

RED LIGHTS MARK FATAL INTERSECTION

Red lights flash four ways at the inter-section of Richardson and Richmond Road, effective Friday.

The change from a two-way stop on Richmond only was recommended by a coroner's jury after a motorcyclist was killed in collision with a car April 25.

Cars approaching the intersection from all directions are now required to stop before proceeding through.

Museum Opened

ST. IVES, England (CP) — A museum which is a memorial to the sculptor Barbara Hepworth has opened in this southwest England town. It is in the studio and garden where Dame Barbara lived and worked in her later years before her death in a fire there in May, 1975, at the age of 72. The establishment of the museum was her wish.

TEEN-AGE BULLIES TERRORIZE TRAIN

By FRANK CSONGOS

NEW YORK (UPI) — It was the longest ride of my life.

It started peacefully. Then terror struck the subway, the kind usually reserved for late night movies on television. But it was all real. And happening to me. And to others.

A gang of teen-agers, following a disturbance at a rock concert, took over several cars on a Manhattan-bound Flushing Line train. About a dozen of them started to harass passengers, then proceeded to rob them and beat up those who resisted.

There was not a single policeman in sight.

I saw an elderly man wrestled to the ground, his face bleeding, his packet torn.

"Give me your wallet and your watch, you . . .," one of them shouted at him."

The man cried for help.

Not a single passenger moved.

I started to get up. Someone knocked me down.

The train suddenly stopped in a tunnel between two stations. It stayed there about 15 minutes. The lights went out. It was dead dark.

'Light up this joint, man," one youth said to another. They lit up.

The lights came on. The elderly man tried to get up. He couldn't.

My watch is gone," he said. 'My wallet. My alien registration card."

I felt a shove. I staggered away.

Three young guys ran into the subway car from the adjoining one.

"I just ripped these watches off," one boasted. "Look at this digital. It don't even work."

Someone grabbed me.

"Give me your watch," he shouted at me.

I didn't answer. I didn't dare to look up. I only saw a brown jacket with leather trimming.

He grabbed my watch band, starting to pull it. I shoved him away. Another punched me in the face.

I looked around. The other passengers, mostly teen-age girls, appeared terrified.

Another punch.

Instinctively, I yelled out. As hard as I could.

"Help!"

None came.

The door suddenly swung open. It was a dark, deserted subway station

I ran out.

The train sped away.

I wasn't followed.

It was nearly midnight. I caught the next subway. It came in a few minutes and was nearly empty.

I reached Grand Central Station. Then it began to sink in what really happened.

I began to run. I didn't stop running until I reached the office.

Then I remembered a present a fellow UPI staffer gave me just before I was transferred to New York from Pittsburgh. He did it partly in jest because of what we had heard about New York.

It was a spray can with some kind of tear gas sold in various states for self protection.

Murder Trial Slated

A charge of murder punishable by life imprisonment laid in connection with a shooting death in the Colwood area late in 1974 is expected to go before a B.C. Supreme Court judge and jury early in the fall assizes starting Oct. 18 in Victoria.

A preliminary hearing of the charge against Victoria area resident David John Ross, 32, ended Friday in the Victoria provincial court section of Judge F. S. Green with an order committing Ross to the higher court for trial.

The preliminary hearing had lasted six days with Nicholas Lang as prosecutor and Douglas Christie as defence lawyer. Publication or broadcast of the evidence was prohibited by Green at the request of Christie.

The charge resulted from the death of another Victoria area resident, Malcolm Preston Cunningham, 22, whose body was found in December in bushes near rail tracks going through Colwood.

Cunningham was last seen in Victoria during the weekend of Nov. 1-2, 1975. The charge against Ross was read in Victoria provincial court in January following his arrest in Winnipeg.

Wide Range of Opinion About Companies Wanted

People from all walks of life are encouraged to give their views to the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration scheduled to sit in Victoria June 28.

"It's not a witch hunt," said assistant secretary Richard M. Hofer, in pre-hearing visit to Victoria.

Ideally, he said, the commission will illuminate the role of business — especially big business — in the Canadian socioeconomic fabric.

The first series of public hearings last year failed to get the desired range of response, but so far the second phase has done much better, according to Hofer.

He said it is hoped the hearings and work of the commission will put some hard facts behind the imagined role of big business in Canada. One of its mandates is to enquire whether safeguards are required to protect the public interest in the presence of concentrated big business.

Hofer said much of the antipathy toward big business stems from ignorance, and the hearings and deliberations of commissioners should help foster understanding.

How the business role should evolve is one aspect for consideration — whether mergers or breakups are appropriate to keep business competitive and within the public interest.

"We want a laundry list of the pros and cons so we (the commissioners) can make rational decisions," Hofer said.

He observed that both the little man and the corporate leader can both feel "incredibly isolated" from the decision makers, and the royal commission hearings give both the opportunity to be heard.

Hearings in the Maritimes indicate the second series was "turning out more satisfactorily." The wider range of opinion was being expressed through academics and ordinary citizens; from simple farmers to the head of Maritime Telephone and Telegraph.

"We want to know what other people think we should be dealing with, within our mandate," Hofer said.

Hearings are informal and no notice of submission is required. Contributions may be extemporaneous and oral, or in written form, delivered to the three-man commission or mailed in.

Chairman is R. B. Bryce, and members are Pierre Nadeau and Robert Dickerson.

The hearing in Victoria is at 7 p.m. in the Empress Hotel, and will last until the final speaker is heard, Hofer said.

The only other sitting in B.C. this month will be at Prince George, June 29.

Alleged Kidnapper Weeps When Told Victim Escaped

BURNABY (CP) — Corporal John Iwanson said Friday in provincial court that a suspected kidnapper collapsed and cried like a baby when he learned his alleged victim was not dead.

Cpl. Iwanson was testifying in the trial of Rainer Peter Schuenemann, 27, of Vancouver, charged with kidnapping, attempted extortion and theft in the alleged abduction of Margaret Siborne, 53, of Vancouver on April 29. Schuenemann pleaded not guilty to all charges.

Mrs. Siborne, a bank manager's wife, said a hooded man forced his way into her car in an underground parking lot in Vancouver and she thought it was going to be a sexual attack.

He hit me on the head several times, handcuffed me and taped my eyes," she testified. "He covered me and we drove along what sounded like busy streets."

She said it was then that she assumed it was an extortion attempt on the bank.

Mrs. Siborne said she was eventually pulled into a bush area up a hill, gagged and shackled to a tree. After waiting 20 minutes, she said, she was able to free her legs and stagger towards a road, where she was picked up by two motorists and later taken to RCMP headquarters here.

Her husband, George Siborne, was informed of the situation, he testified, and later received a ransom note. He said he followed instructions and picked up further notes in various telephone booths before he was told by detectives on May 1 that they had a man in custody.

Cpl. Iwanson said Schuenemann was arrested by Constable Doug Clary on a routine patrol in the Burnaby Mountain area May 1 and that Schuenemann led the way to the kidnap site later that night.

The corporal said Schuenemann said he was "a dead man. The woman, she'd be in the bush for three days without food or water. She must be dead."

Cpl. Iwanson said that Schuenemann began frantically pulling at a pile of branches at the place where Mrs. Siborne had been tied, and said, "she's not there."

When told Mrs. Siborne was unharmed, Cpl. Iwanson testified, and that she had escaped, Schuenemann fell to his knees with his hands over his face and wept uncontrollably.

The case continues.

LOOKING LIKE war orphans in a bombed - out neighborhood, these youngsters are in fact runaways living in abandoned buildings in the South Bronx area of New York.

15,000 Children on the Loose

By GEORGE VECSEY

New York Times

NEW YORK — You couldn't see Rosa at first. She was sitting in the shadows, behind the three motorcycles, in the back of the gang's clubhouse. Then the gang leader nodded, she told her story to a sympathetic social worker.

Rosa's story is a classic among New York City's youthful runaways. Her stepfather had abused her and her mother had not believed her. And so she had hit the streets, at the age of 16 — not for the thrills of the open road, but for the escape.

New York City has thousands of these youthful nomads — children who have no homes or children who ran away from home. The Community Service Society, which is currently conducting a survey of the problem in the Bronx, estimates there may be 15,000 childreen on the loose. Social workers say that more children are hitting the streets as families and individuals founder.

What happened when a child of 9 or an almost-adult of 17 no longer lives at home?

Rosa was moderately lucky. A gang with a reputation for fighting has sheltered her in its clubhouse without mistreating her. They share their meagre food with her; they have parties; they ride motorcycles; they protect their turf; the days and nights go by in a blur. But she has a painful infection and is not comfortable living off the gang's generosity.

Other children are not so fortunate as Rosa because the worst evils of the city are waiting to destroy them. It may seem like an adventure at first — the way it did for Danielle when she left her family at the age of 10, "because something happened," as she puts it.

At first, Danielle slept in the abandoned buildings that exist all over the Bronx — no plumbing, no heat, sometimes no windows or doors — which harbor fugitives from the law and from their own families.

Children decorate these buildings with scraps of curtain and soda boxes or any better furniture they can find. They sleep "with The Daily News for a sheet. The New York Post for a pillow and The "New York Times for a blanket," as one man put it.

For Danielle and other runaways, there is usually something to do. It may not sound like much to the organized middle-class mind, but it is the rhythm of the street — hanging around, music from transistor radios, fighting, begging or stealing, and "getting high all the time, just getting high," as Danielle says.

Like many other runaways, Danielle stayed in her home area because shopkeepers gave her a little credit or sometimes free food. It was a community that was not shocked to see an adolescent child in shabby clothing standing around on the street in the middle of the night wandering into abandoned buildings.

She went to work, entertaining men in the abandoned buildings, at the age of 11 or 12, determined — she told a social worker — "to be a better whore than my mother." She kept that up until the police sent her to an agency for children. She is now 13 and living in a children's home and grows wistful when she talks of her time on the street.

"I miss it, to tell you the truth," she says. "It wasn't so bad. I knew what I was doing."

Social workers say that girls are most vulnerable, but boys also learn in their early teens that they can make money as "chicken-hawks," known on 42nd Street. One social workers says she can often find one of her charges in that area.

Not all runaways drift into vice and crime. Some find the street less chaotic than the home they left, the gang more protection than the family they left behind.

"It's the American pioneer spirit still alive," says Lorraine Reilly, a Roman Catholic nun who runs four shelters in the Bronx. "This country hasn't developed a system to take care of our own. Whenever things get bad, you hit the road."

Running away in America has been vastly overrated, Sister Lorraine insists. "We think of Tom Sawyer attending his own funeral, Toby Tyler joining the circus, all the Flower Children who sought "peace and love" in the 1960's.

"But those were middle-class white kids," says Denise Minns, a social worker. "They hung out around college campuses and when they wanted to come back, they just picked up the phone and called mommy and daddy."

The middle-class runaways heard a million rock songs idealizing the open highway. A national runaway bill was passed by U.S. Congress and a national runaway hot-line was established to help people get in touch with their children.

"But that doesn't help city kids much," says Sister Lorraine. "The city kids don't go very far. They stay in the same neighborhoods because they know who will give them a meal when they need it. They even see their families sometimes, but they're runaways anyway you look at it."

From her perspective, Sister Lorraine sees the runaways coming from backgrounds of alcohol, drugs, lack of work, lack of education, lack of incentive — the whole pathology of urban society.

"The runaway is often the healthiest person in the family," she says. "Wait till you meet the families. The child who runs away is saying. "I'm not going to be part of this."

PRESIDENT BURNS IF CLIENTS SMOKE

By JAMES CARRIER

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — Oscar Austad will even give a smoker a good deal on a set of golf clubs. But light up and the deal's off.

With the chutzpah that comes with running his own business, Austad will turn away a customer who wants to smoke while shopping for a $400 set of clubs.

Militancy about smoking has been part of the Austad Co. policy ever since the former insurance adjuster and non-golfer began stocking a few clubs in his garage 13 years ago.

"I don't know if we've ever lost any business because of it," said the relaxed 54-year-old Austad from behind a cluttered desk. "I don't care if we do."

The recreation shoes and golf shirts he wears give no hint of the phenomenal success he has become. Four conglomerates listed on the New York Stock Exchange have made "multimillion-dollar" offers for the company, which registered $9 million in sales in 1975 and looks for $12 million this year.

The air in the biggest golf distributing warehouse in the country is hospital fresh. Not one cigarette has been lit inside.

A sign on the glass door reads, "Lungs at work—no smoking" and in the foyer is the last ashtray a visitor will see until he comes out again.

When Austad hired each of his 75 employees, he asked whether they smoked and if they could abstain four hours. He does not permit smoking even on coffee breaks or anywhere on the 10-acre grounds, so a smoker has to sneak off at lunch time.

He has a standing $100 bonus offer to any employee who will quit smoking for a year. So far, one man has taken him up on it.

"Even as a kid I used to resent sitting in a room where people were blowing smoke in my face."

His father smoked a cigar, which he hated. And when he was nine his mother pulled him aside and make him promise not to smoke or drink. He did, and it was enough to get him through the temptations of the teen years.

Austad's business is almost as simple as his no smoking dictum. No advertising, no salesmen. He mails 500,000 catalogues, designed by himself, to people who ask for them. All orders are shipped out the day they arrive.

By his own admission, Austad is a "lousy" golfer, shooting 60 for nine holes. He thinks golf takes too long and prefers tennis.

'Amerasians' of Age and Bitter About Treatment as Foreigners

By RICHARD HALLORAN

New York Times

SEOUL, South Korea — They call themselves the half-persons. The Koreans politely call them the mixed-race people. Pearl S. Buck, the author who wrote about the Orient, called them Amerasians.

They are the offspring of American soldiers and Korean women born mostly of liaisons 20 to 25 years ago during and after the Korean war. They have come of age. And they are bitter.

Kim Kap Joo, who is 22, said: "It's impossible to have pride as a mixed-race person. Americans have pride as Americans and Koreans have pride as Koreans. But I have no pride as either."

Another mixed-race person, a 23-year-old woman named Auh Yung Mi, put it this way: "Even though we live in Korea, we are treated as foreigners." The Korean word for foreigners she used means "outside person" and in the Korean context that stings much more than in English.

A third, Lee Chun Shik, who is 24, said: "Korea is different from the United States or the Phillipines because Korea is a closed society as far as race is concerned. We are not part of that society."

Another 24-year-old, Kim To Hyun, pointed out: "In Japan, they have mixed-race persons but they have their own area of activity — they're entertainers or singers or models. But in Korea, it's not that way. We have nothing."

Others here who know the mixed-race people say many despise themselves because they don't know who their fathers were. Many of the mothers were prostitutes.

Their mothers have often turned against them as they have grown up. "Maybe they were considered cute as babies, but as they grew older they became more of an embarrassment to their mothers," according to Carroll B. Hodges, the director of the American Kor-Asian Foundation, which tries to help the mixed-race youngsters.

In a homogenous Korean society that is uncompromising with those who are different, they have been mocked. "Some have been taunted from the first day they entered school because they have blue eyes," Hodges said.

For the most part, the mixed-race people have had inferior educations. They have not been able to get into good secondary schools because of discrimination and because they come from poorer homes.

That has meant few could qualify for vocational schools or universities. Those who have managed to be admitted have often dropped out because of discrimination and their own immaturity caused by uncertain home life.

Miss Auh, Lee, and the two Kims have been among the most fortunate. Miss Auh is a university graduate in social work, Lee in chemical engineering. Kim Kap Joo is an electronic technician and Kim To Hyun an auto mechanic. The Kims are not related; Kim is the most common name in Korea.

But in those cases where a mixed-race person has made it through a university, or vocational training, finding a job is almost impossible. Thus, Hodges wrote in a report: "As more of them become young adults, their difficulties have only begun."

Further, their chances for making good marriages are nearly zero. A few have married others of mixed race, Hodges said, "but it hasn't worked out as they were marriages between two insecure people." Many of the mixed-race persons consider one another brothers and sisters rather than potential husbands and wives.

In another report, Hodges said: "As many of the young women reach a marriage age, their frustration grows in this land where a timely marriage has lost none of its traditional significance. Many seek counselling but there is so little hope to offer."

Not even the South Korean Army will have them. The men once were subject to the draft but have been excused because they were ridiculed and beaten up by Korean soldiers.

$130,000 Awarded In Mishap

SASKATOON (CP) — Two Strongfield, Sask., men have been awarded a total of more than $130,000 in Court of Queen's Bench in a civil action against CP Rail.

Robert Norrish, whose lower limbs were permanently paralysed following a truck-train collision Feb. 14, 1974, received $128,806 and Dean Norrish received $1,437.

The Norrish suit claimed negligent conduct by CP Rail and train engineer Alfred Adams. Court was told the truck in which Robert, Dean and John Norrish were riding was hit when it became stuck on the tracks at a Strongield railway crossing, about 45 miles south of here, during a blizzard.

The jury said the train was travelling at 30 miles an hour in a 35-miles-an-hour zone, an excessive speed considering the weather condition and added that Adams failed to maintain a proper watch for vehicles on the crossing.

FISH COUGH

STEVENAGE, England (CP) — Coughing fish are being used in research on monitoring pollution in rivers and streams.

At the department of the environment's water research centre in this town near London, scientists are detecting the coughing of rainbow trout as they swim in running water with pollutants added to it.

Nobody knows exactly how, but a fish produces small electric currents. The signals come from the movements of the mouth and gill cover and they can be detected by electrodes in the water.

At the centre, rainbow trout swim in a narrow tank along which electrodes are placed. Their breathing is recorded on paper tape.

When pollutants are added to water pumped through the tank, a trout literally coughs. Like a human being trying to remove mucus from the lungs, the fish coughs to remove it from its gills.

Rainbow trout are used because they are more sensitive than ordinary fish. Their heartbeats can also be deteced and the centre is using these signals as another indication of pollution. The heartbeat speeds up, like that of human begins, under stress.

The trout cannot indicate every frm of pollution because substances which may be poisonous to people are not necessarily harmful to fish and it may not be extremely sensitive to some pollutants. But it is sensitive to many, including some of the most important pollutants, from metal treatment processes and oil products.

The rainbow trout also reacts to small changes in oxygen content and temperature.

In practice, the trout may provide a good early warning system for many kinds of pollution in rivers. Bypass channels could be provided in which the fish could swim and the signals from them be telemetered to a distant checking point and linked to an alarm. They might for example quickly show pollution of streams from storm drains containing oil pollutants from a highway.

Fancy Shoes His Own Form Of Happiness

NORTH VANCOUVER, B.C. (CP) — Larry Luongo is a cobbler who makes far-out shoes and boots and also finds time to work as an equipment man for a professional hockey team.

Mr. Luongo, 39, is a native of Italy and began helping a cobbler when he was six years old. For the last 14 years he has operated Larry's Shoe Repair, where four years ago he started designing fancy shoes and boots.

There's a lawyer, for example, who strolls into courtrooms in an original pair of yellow snakeskin shoes matching his yellow suit.

A dancer, Princess Lilly, has boots which run to her thigh, inscribed Princess on the left boot and Lilly on the right. The writing is in red leather and so are the maple leaves running down the white leather legs.

Bachman-Turner Overdrive, the successful rock 'n' roll band, once ordered 10 pairs of boots for each of the four band members, just for leisure wear.

Mr. Luongo's custom-booted clients are businessmen, lawyers, doctors, hockey players, dancers and musicians. He says he has at least 1,500 customers "from all over."

"I love my business," he says. "I never get fed up.

"If I make something and the people are happy, I am happy, too. I am happier than they are."

In his spare time, Mr. Luongo works with Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League, doing equipment repairs, giving massages and, of course, making boots.

He says hockey players order most of the really fancy boots and shoes "because they have a lot of money."

About his creations, he says high heels and thick soles would be uncomfortable if they didn't fit properly. He takes a plaster cast of the foot, then makes a wooden cast and stretches soft leather to a perfect fit.

Mr. Luongo fits special pockets both inside and outside the boot if a customer orders them.

He makes denim shoes to match denim clothes and says they last a long time because he lines them with soft kid leather.

The shoes with the highest appeal, he says, are made of cobra, alligator, python and lizard skins. Most expensive of all is rattlesnake, which he imports, although he is looking into the quantities of rattlesnakes around British Columbia.

Some of his designs, like hip-high boots of rattlesnake skin, run as high as $600 a pair.

A BIRTHDAY FOR DR. MAX

By Sir Harry Golombek

When the Dutch, in a quaintly cautious way, invited me to go to Amsterdam and join in the celebrations of May 20, "when Dr. Max Euwe hoped to reach his 75th birthday," I duly presented myself at London Airport and within an hour was in Amsterdam airport at Schiphol.

It turned out to be a delightful weekend in which the somewhat nostalgic feeling of greeting Dr. Euwe, former World Champion and my boyhood hero, was intensified by encountering many other old friends while making some new ones. The present World Champion, Anatoly Karpov, was there as he had just finished winning a double round tournament (ahead of Walter Browne, Fridrik Olafsson and Jan Timman) that was held in Amsterdam as a kind of prelude to the final Euwe celebrations. Oddly enough, he, too, celebrated a birthday during the proceedings. On May 23, he became 25 — only 50 years younger than Dr. Euwe!

There, too, was Grandmaster Yuri Averbach, President of the Soviet Chess Federation, and yet another President, my old friend and comrade in many a chess event, George Koltanowski, President of the U.S. Chess Federation. It occurred to me that in some respects his chess career had run a similar course to that of Dr. Euwe. The great Dutchman had been world champion (1935-37). Well, George, too, has been and is world champion, world champion of blindfold simultaneous chess.

He, too, like Dr. Euwe, abandoned an active playing career for administration and organization — above all, for the popularization of the game.

The hotel at which we stayed was a fine one with a large restaurant area. On the first morning, George came down to breakfast and, faced with the choice of turning left or right, made a guess for the left. There he found himself faced by some 300 solid Dutch burghers all engaged in eating an ample breakfast. On George's entry, there was a small hush and it seemed to him that they all gazed at him with something akin to awe and veneration. He looked around for chess players, found none and sat down to eat along.

No words were exchanged between his neighbors and him but he became conscious that they were glancing at him in a most respectful way. On emerging from the room, he noticed an announcement board on which was written "Breakfast for the Commissioners of Police." The commissioners, not recognizing him as one of them, had naturally assumed he was somebody in authority in the government, possibly an Attorney General or a Lord Chief Justice!

Gallery Director Starts July 1

OTTAWA (CP) — Joseph Martin, 53, has been appointed acting director of the National Gallery effective July 1 when Jean Sutherland Boggs leaves for a post at Harvard University.

Announcing the appointment, George Ignatieff, chairman of the board of trustees of the national museums, said Martin will assume all the director's responsibilities until the federal cabinet makes a permanent appointment.

Marin, whose studies in art history included a doctoral thesis on Renaissance architecture in France, has been deputy director of the gallery in charge of international exhibitions, publications and public relations since last December.

He was head of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization's office in Venice for 2½ years, in charge of international efforts to preserve its ancient sites and monuments.

WHO WHAT . . . ? ?

The level of debate in the B.C. legislature is not always renowned for its intellectuality.

But now it seems Hansard, official recorder of house proceedings, has come to expect the worst.

In debate this week, a question was asked: "Who drafted the Coal Act?"

JUDGE BANS CONTROLLERS' STRIKE

Wildcat Air Walkout?

Times News Services

OTTAWA — The federal court granted the government a 10-day injunction today aimed at blocking a national strike by the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, but there were indications that there will be a walkout anyway.

Shortly after the decision was handed down by the court, Jim Livingston, president of the 2,200-member union, told reporters he hoped his members would obey the injunction but he warned he might not be able to control the more militant members.

In Calgary, Doug Dickson, chairman of the association's local branch, said there could be no guarantee that southern Alberta controllers will stay on the job Sunday. The men were "extremely dissatisfied and emotionally overwrought" over the issuance of the injunction.

And in Vancouver, John Marshall, Pacific Region air traffic control director, said today that there could be a walkout despite the injunction.

"However, I'm not about to advocate that my members disobey the law," he said.

"But I do feel that there are going to be some very, very upset controllers. How the individual acts I'm not about to predict."

Al Cowan, chairman of the Vancouver branch said controllers in Vancouver do not plan a wildcat strike.

In Montreal, CALPA president Ken Malley said airline pilots may stay off the job Sunday should "a breakdown" in air traffic control occur.

Malley said such a breakdown could take the form of "wildcat strikes" by controllers in different parts of the country.

The decision came about three hours before the union was to announce results of a strike vote on the question of use of the French language in Quebec airports.. The strike had been scheduled to begin at midnight tonight.

Mr. Justice George Addy, when announcing the ruling, said the threatened strike would cause "grave and irreparable harm" to the public, business and Canada's international reputation.

He said the controllers' stated concern over public safety in the language issue "an artificial motive."

The question of public safety is not the responsibility of the union but the government, the judge told the court.

Livingston said he was bound by the injunction to tell his members to obey the law and he was hopeful they would.

Airline spokesmen in Vancouver said domestic flights in and out of Vancouver will be cancelled and most international flights will be rerouted through Seattle if air traf-

'Nine Near Misses'

EDMONTON (CP) — The western regional director of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association says there have been nine near misses involving aircraft in Canada in the last 30 days because the battle over bilingualism has preoccupied air traffic controllers.

Bob Crossley said in an interview Friday night:

"We're the last people in the world who want to criticize these people (the controllers) because they're the best in the world.

"Our life depends on these people. They're professionals.

"But there is some outside pressure breaking down our system and we don't have to go far to figure out what it is."

Mr. Crossley said that because of the language issue, the controllers "don't have their mind on their work."

Speaking before the federal court granted an injunction today aimed at blocking the threatened strike by the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, Mr. Crossley said pilots might refuse to fly even if the controllers remained on the job.

"The air is not a safe place to be right now," he said. "Not any of us are much interested in being told by a federal judge or provincial judge od any kind of pudge: 'You can take off and go kill yourself'."

Mr. Crossley, who said earlier in the week that CP Air and Air Canada passenger planes narrowly averted a collision over North Bay, Ont., June 10, said:

"There has been a great rash of near-misses and we know the ministry of transport is seriously concerned."

A CP Air spokesman in Vancouver said the North Bay incident was "apparently a result of an error by air traffic controllers."

In a telephone interview from Ottawa, a transport department spokesman said the near-miss over North Bay was being investigated, but declined to say what may have caused the incident.

Pickets Obey Court Order

VANCOUVER (CP) — Eight pickets from Arvida, Que., who had picketed the Aluminum Company of Canada smelter plant at Kitimat since last Saturday, today removed the picket line.

The move followed the serving of a cease and desist order issued by the B.C. Labor Relations Board, with the backing of the B.C. Supreme Court.

The order was served today after the pickets refused to accept it Friday night from Alcan security staff.

Following the decision Friday about 300 union members threw up log barricades to the Alcan property.

RCMP were twice called to the scene and asked the pickets to remove the barricades which was eventually done. Police then escorted Alcan foremen into the plant.

The Quebec workers set up their picket line just hours after RCMP ended picketing by Kitimat workers a week ago, arrested and charging 32 persons. The Kitimat workers are members of the Canadian Association of Smelter and Allied Workers.

Union spokesmen said the membership would meet Sunday to determine a future course of action.

The Quebec workers are members of the Federation des Syndicats du Secteur de l' Aluminum of Quebec. The board issued its order Friday that picketing by the Quebec workers was illegal and should be stopped immediately.

In Vancouver, union local president Peter Burton said at a labor protest against wage controls that the workers may vote Sunday to end the walkout because "there is a certain sense of demoralization."

The Kitimat workers went on strike to obtain a higher wage settlement than provided by their current contract. They got 8.9 per cent this year and 6.5 for the second year, which is in line with federal anti-inflation board guidelines.

LEAVE $ TAP OPEN–DRAPEAU INTERSECTION

MONTREAL (CP) — Mayor Jean Drapeau reiterated Friday that Montreal's Olympic Games, currently estimated to cost $1.4 billion, will be self-financing.

"If we leave the taps open until the bathtub is full," the mayor said, the money raised by self-financing plans "will help Olympians for years to come." Drapeau was speaking at a ceremony to unveil three new Olympic fund raising stamps.

Also speaking at the ceremony, Postmaster-General Bryce Mackasey praised "Mr. Drapeau's dream" and said the Olympics will not cost Canadians anything if they are evaluated the right way.

Fighting Delays Convoy

BEIRUT (UPI) — Heavy fighting along the roads surrounding Beirut today forced a 24-hour postponement of a convoy taking hundreds of Americans and Britons out of Lebanon.

A British spokesman urged everyone to be ready Sunday for what he said might be the last chance to get out of the city.

Announcement of the postponement, coming only minutes before the convoy's scheduled departure, brought groans of disbelief and frustration from crowds of Americans assembled at the Riviera Hotel and from Britons and other nationals at the British embassy waiting for the long ride to Damascus.

A leftist military communique said Syrian and pro-Syrian troops holding a section of the evacuation route near Beirut Airport began shelling leftist positions and Palestinian refugee camps about the time the convoy was scheduled to leave.

The shelling escalated into a battle with mortars, artillery and machinegun fire, making the road a possible death-trap.

Meanwhile, a U.S. Navy task force with 1,800 marines aboard was standing by several hundred miles off the coast of Lebanon. The attack-carrier America, loaded with more than 90 jets, was ordered to within about 150 miles of Lebanon.

Fire Destroys Indian School On Reserve Near Brentwood

The main building fo the Tsartlip Indian school near Brentwood was destroyed by fire early today.

The alarm was turned in at 2 a.m. and no one was injured in the five hours firemen fought the blaze. Loss is estimated to be at least $150,000.

A spokesman for the Central Saanich volunteer fire department declined comment on the possibility of arson but said the fire marshal's office has been called into investigation of the cause.

The 26-year-old school, operated by the federal Indian affairs department, had three classrooms with about 70 pupils from grades 2 to 6, administrator Marie Cooper said today. For them the school year has ended about a week early.

Three other school buildings on the site are undamaged. One of them housed the Little Raven Nursery school, a second was used for a grade 1 class and the third for grade 7 pupils.

A fire department deputy said the fire broke out in the north end of the main building, in the vicinity of a nurse's office and storage room.

About 20 men with four fire trucks turned out to battle the fire, with four or five men and one truck from the Sidney fire department being called in to assist.

"We will be negotiating with the federal government for the rebuilding of the school," Ms. Cooper said.

Saanich firemen were called to a barn fire at 1555 West Burnside shortly after midnight but the building was completely in flames when they arrived and burned to the ground.

A department spokesman said today the barn was empty and residents on the property had moved out earlier in the day. Cause of the fire is under investigation by police.

$300,000 BLAZE IN SURREY SCHOOL

SURREY (CP) — Arson is suspected in a fire which burned out the interior of the Erma Stephenson elementary school in Surrey Friday and caused an estimated $300,000 to $350,000 damage.

One classroom and the library was saved in the fire which started in the southeast corner of the school in a classroom.

Jock Smith, Surrey school board chairman, said Friday a window was broken in the school and a car and a truck were also set fire near the school.

He said: "We have been having a lot of trouble with vandalism in the area. As a matter of fact, it is because of a delegation of parents complaining about the vandalism in the school that we set up a special monitoring system that was mainly responsible for saving at least part of the school."

Navy Man, Youth Die in Crashes

A 21-year-old Esquimalt navy man was killed and his passenger injured early today in a single-car crash at the Swartz Bay ferry terminal.

Dead is Michael Brant Maxwell of Coleman, Alta. The passenger, Gregory Kenneth Dean, 22, is in fair condition at Royal Jubilee Hospital. Both were crewmen aboard HMCS Yukon at Canadian Forces Base, Esquimalt.

Identity of the dead driver is being withheld pending notification of his next-of-kin in Alberta. The passenger, Gregory Kenneth Dean, 22, is in fair condition at Royal Jubilee Hospital. Both were from HMCS Yukon.

Sidney RCMP said their car sideswiped a lamp standard, spun around before "wrapping right around" a second lamp standard. The accident took place about 2 a.m.

An 18-year-old youth from the B.C. interior was killed Friday evening after being pinned in an overturned car on Telegraph Road near Cobble Hill.

Shawnigan Lake RCMP said the victim was a passenger in a car driven by a 16-year-old boy which went out of control and flipped.

A two-car collision on Esquimalt Road at Catherine Street shortly before 3 a.m. sent two men to hospital for treatment.

TO STAY HEALTHY . . . STAY SINGLE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Married people usually are healthier than the formerly married, but healthiest of all are those who never wed, according to the U.S. government's first statistical study on the relationship of marriage to illness.

"These over-all measures of health status indicate that married persons had fewer health problems than formerly married persons," said the National Centre for Health Statistics.

Healthiest of all are persons who never married, usually younger than those in the other two groups. But married persons were least likely to be institutionalized for care in nursing homes or mental hospitals, the report said.

Formerly married persons — widowed, separated, divorced — were most likely to be admitted to places providing care for the mentally ill, it said, and the never-married were most likely to wind up in nursing homes in their old age.

Blacks Attack Looters as Riots Cool

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Black mobs today attacked black looters and other criminals they believe were responsible for the destruction and violence of recent days, but otherwise an uneasy calm replaced the worst racial conflict in white-ruled South Africa's history, police said.

Two looters trapped inside a shop in Tembisa, outside Johannesburg, were reported beaten to death by other blacks and a third man was injured and taken to hospital.

In Tokoza township, blacks incensed at finding a beer hall burned down stoned a crowd of young gangsters they held responsible.

There have been reports that black criminals took advantage of the riots to burn and loot shops and beer halls. Observers said the attacks against black criminals might be the beginning of a black backlash against the widespread destruction of the neighborhoods.

Heavily-armed black and white policemen continued to patrol the tense, riot-scarred black townships ringing Johannesburg, watching for fresh outbreaks of the violence that has taken more than 100 lives and left at least 1,000 injured since Wednesday.

The worst-hit townships were scenes of desolation. Burned-out buses and other vehicles littered streets lined with the charred remains of offices, stores and other buildings set ablaze by mobs of angry blacks.

Rioting ebbed after several thousand police, armed with automatic weapons and orders to use every available means to crush the black uprising, moved into troubled areas late Friday.

Despite the return to relative calm, police said the situation was still tense in Soweto and Alexandra, the two townships where rioting was most intense. Sporadic incidents of stoning and arson were reported in both black settlements overnight.

Prime Minister John Vorster told the South African Parliament Friday: "We will not be intimidated and will

It's a week since Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, and the related yet quite unrelated Habitat Forum ended in Vancouver.

But for me the memory lingers on.

Though it's not so much the memory of the success of Habitat itself, for it was pretty dull, ended in discord and no one is really claiming that it was a success.

But I did spend a couple of afternoons at the informal Habitat Forum down at Jericho Beach and came away with a few things to remember.

Even the Forum earned its share of criticism from the media.

It was called a miniature PNE, nothing more than a carnival by the sea where people went to eat, drink and be merry.

And to a certain extent, the critics were right. There were many who just went to enjoy themselves. Everywhere there were booths selling foods from many different lands and it's true that it was not any of the guest speakers but the beer hall that drew the biggest crowds each day. And so, for some, it was a carnival by the sea.

But I felt it was more.

Behind the gaiety, the songs, the dances and the beer . . . the ideal and the concern were there.

A tremendous amount of credit must go, I believe, to the people who worked so hard on the site for Habitat Forum. Here, displayed to perfection was the very concept of recycling used or wasted materials; the old hangars converted into meeting halls and showplaces; the logs washed ashore and left over from B.C.'s main industry turned into seats and walkways and giant toys for children to play on. This in itself was a lesson.

Clustered on the hillside above the hangars were many interesting examples of housing for the world's poor and disaster-stricken. There were geodesic domes, cheap forms of do-it-yourself homes, cardboard dwellings to house those suddenly made homeless by things like earthquakes, and more.

And toiling away amongst them was B.C.'s own young log-home builder James Long of Houston, quietly putting across his message that for cheaper and more soundly-constructed homes Canadians could do no better than return to the materials used by the country's pioneers.

Down below in the old hangars there were films to see like the very disturbing anti-nuclear power documentary "Powers That Be" narrated with feeling by actor Jack Lemmon, lectures on everywhere from China to Cuba to hear, and people to meet like Rajeev Sethi.

Rajeev is a young Indian from Delhi, a consultant with the Haruana Government Small Scale Industries Corp. who was sponsored at the Forum by the International Planned Parenthood Federation.

He described himself as having a very informal education — a designer largely concerned with communications. But Rajeev Sethi was a typical example of the many young people who brought forth, and listened to, the living problems of the world's poor. And that was the idea behind the Forum.

A 27-year-old who became interested in housing at the age of five when he cut up shoe boxes and made them into little cardboard dwellings, Rajeev was a hit at Jericho. Twice daily, people would crowd into his little tent-like structure inside one of the hangars to watch a simple bicycle-powered slide display dealing with the housing problems in India's villages and to hear his almost hypnotic voice.

The basic drawings, done by the villagers themselves, and his appeal were very moving. But Rajeev was unhappy that more people actually involved in rural development weren't attending his sessions.

"The specialists haven't been coming," he admitted a little sadly. "What is very tragic is that no one seems very concerned about the rural areas."

His own concern is over the lack of communications. People design buildings for the villages, he says, but do not seem to be able to get through to the villagers themselves the purpose of the buildings.

Then, despite the hypnotic voice, people get restless. Some leave. There is so much to see. So little time.

And Brother Blue, who has taken a break from his soul story-telling and dancing to sit in on one of Rajeev's sessions, is upset.

"This is an extraordinary man!" cries out Brother Blue, standing up. "I like his questions, and I like what he is doing. Bless him."

But Rajeev understands that people here are time-conscious.

"They come in and they like what they see and what they hear but all the time their head remains concerned with what they're missing elsewhere," he said. "Everyone wants to be quick, quick."

Of course, part of his message, dealing with land-sharing ("There are no places for palaces in a sea of poverty") doesn't go down too well in our affluent society. But Rajeev holds no grudges.

"Over here, I don't think it's that you're less concerned, it's just that you're very far away from it," he said. "That leads to bad values and bad ideas. But I don't think people are really mean or anything like that.

"Or, at least, I wouldn't like to believe so. . ."

Mysterious Sooke Resort to Re-Open?

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

Shrouded with mystery, the subject of countless rumors, the lavish million dollar Grouse Nest Resort in Sooke may yet re-open.

Hasaam Kamil, president of Grouse Nest Resorts Ltd. told the Times a study is under way to determine the feasibility of such a plan.

The study began two months ago, he said, and is expected to take another four months to complete.

The resort, situated in 600 acres of woodland and shorefront on the eastern edge of Sooke Harbor was renovated at a cost of more than half a million dollars in 1964.

A consortium of unnamed investors from Zurich, Switzerland had bought the property two years earlier with the intention of creating a luxury resort based on old world tradition and splendor.

Comprising a main lodge and seven A-frame villas, it was heralded as one of the most exclusive hideaways on the west coast and boasted one of the finest European cuisines in the country.

However, after two short seasons it closed, an economic failure.

A few years ago Kamil, in an interview, said there had proved to be not sufficient population in the Victoria area to support the hotel and dining room operation. Rather than compromise on quality, he said, the decision was made to close the resort.

He and his family have continued to live in an apartment in the main lodge. The grounds have been kept up and the buildings maintained but for all intents and purposes there hasn't been a paying guest since 1966.

Rumors about the resort were sparked long before its closure.

Residents in Sooke wondered why, for example, the new owners had to bring workmen from Europe to do the renovating.

They also looked with suspicion on the ominous No Trespassing and Beware of Dog signs that still hang from trees and posts along the perimeter of the property. There was even talk of armed guards.

Kamil once explained that European artisans and craftsmen had to be brought over because there was no one in Canada who could do the intricate remodelling. The workmen stayed a year and then left.

Black Labradors are kept on the property but, Kamil has said, they are more family pets than guard dogs. And, he has maintained, there have never been armed guards.

Since the resort closed, the mystery of the place has deepened.

Part of the reason for that is the enigma surrounding Kamil's origins and the source of his obvious wealth.

Anyone in Sooke appears willing to venture an opinion of Kamil and of what goes on at Grouse Nest.

Explosion Rips Service Station

Service station attendant Nicky Radic, 21, opened for business with a bang today.

Part of the Mohawk station at Mike's Auto Repairs, 1911 Oak Bay, blew up at 8:22 a.m. sending Radic to hospital with burns to both legs, face and left hand. He was admitted to Royal Jubilee in satisfactory condition.

Victoria fire department said Radic had just opened the station and went to a small room at the rear of the premises containing electrical circuits and switches where he turned on an air compressor.

The switch ignited vapor from open containers of gasoline which were in the same room, assistant chief Roy Boothroyd said.

Burning debris scattered and filled the masonry building with smoke but did not ignite the structure itself.

Front windows were blown out, the electrical panel was destroyed and electrical engine testing equipment damaged for a total cost estimated at $5,000.

Radic, of 412-535 Niagara, was picked up by a passing motorist who drove him two blocks to Jubilee emergency.

'Fear' Tactics Threaten Parks

An executive of the B.C. Wildlife Federation today accused Forests Minister Tom Waterland of using "fear" tactics as a means of opening the door to logging in provincial parks.

Howard English said it was "utter nonsense" for the minister to claim the setting aside of more land for parks would result in the loss of jobs, and multiple use of parklands might be the answer.

"The minister is just reviving the issue of multiple use of parklands—a policy which the logging industry pressed for during the late sixties," he said.

"The argument for multiple use in the sixties was that trees in parks were over-matured and there was no recreational values in stands of matured timber," he noted. "Now the argument is jobs."

"It's a perennial issue," he added. "The logging industry thinks its entitled to all the timber in the province whether in Beacon Hill Park or elsewhere. It refuses to acknowledge that recreation, wildlife, fisheries and tourism have also a stake in forest lands."

English noted the government is being deluged with requests for more parklands from communities in all parts of the province.

"I suggest this is one reason why Waterland said B.C. can no longer afford to set aside more land as parkland," he said. "He is attempting to counter these requests."

"These communiteis are not asking for too much, English added. "After all most of the land in B.C. was leased out to industry. Other resources were totally ignored."

Victoria Sierra Club president Bruce Hary said Waterland's suggestion of logging parks is a short term solution.

"It's absurd to pretent that logging some prime areas of parkland will have more than a minor, temporary effect," he said.

Welder Trapped By Engine

A Sidney man escaped serious injury Friday when an engine he was welding fell on him and caught fire.

Lionel Kidnson, 53, of 9775 Third, was in satisfactory condition today at Rest Haven Hospital where he was taken with leg injury, face cuts and bruises.

Police said Kidson was working at home when the engine, supported by a block, slipped free and pinned him. Two passersby went to his aid and lifted the engine off before Kison was burned. There was no structural damage.

Scientific Detective Finds Clues in Worms

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

On the job for only six months and with no staff or laboratory, Dr. Ralph Brinkhurst, head of ocean ecology at the Pat Bay Institute of Ocean Sciences, has six programs under way.

Brinkhurst, one of the founders of Pollution Probe, began work at Pat Bay in January.

A specialist in zoology and entomology, the marine biologist's first self-appointed assignment was to give the institute's oceanographers, chemists and mathematicians a series of lectures.

Like a detective, Brinkhurst uses sludge worms and other marine animals as cues to speed up explorations programs of other departments in the institute.

As an example, using the oceanographic vessel Sea Lion, plankton will be studied in Haro Strait at the same time oceanographers are tying to follow the pattern of water from the Pacific mixing into strait water.

To prevent disasters, Brinkhurst said knowledge of change in currents is essential.

"Take, for instance, the Peruvian anchovetta (small sardine) fishery," Brinkhurst said. "When the el Nino current shifted, the bottom fell out of the fishery. Such events can be catastrophic."

Brinkhurst explained that the Peruvians make chicken feed from the anchovettas and when the fishery failed a chain reaction was a slump in the chicken industry.

BRINKHURST

A summer student will be employed for the Haro Strait project as well as one planned for the Colquitz River in Saanich.

Brinkhurst said the Colquitz River was "a small private project," designed to help Saanich solve its pollution problems. Dr. Bob Langford, the marine biologist retained by Saanich for its waterways program, is a former student of Brinkhurst.

Brinkhurst said study of the river's bottom animals will, hopefully, allow Saanich to trace the source of pollution in the river.

A study will also be made of Saanich Inlet where it is known there is no oxygen in the deepest parts. This study, Brinkhurst said "will help us understand more about the artificial lack of oxygen (usually caused by pollution)."

This year, the federal fisheries department introduced anti-dumping legislation.

Working in co-operation with Dr. C. S. Wong, head of ocean chemistry, Brinkhurst will assess what effect the dumping of wood wastes has on sea life, particularly how it affects the oxygen supply.

Joining the Controlled Ecosystem Pollution Expoeriment (CEPEX) team stationed nearby, Brinkhurst also plans to trace chlorophyll in local waters, using aircraft equipped with specialized monitoring equipment.

"We'll also have a parallel trial, tracking from a boat," he said.

The presence of sludge worms is a sign of pollution and Brinkhurst, who is internationally known for his environmental expertise, is continuing his studies on various species of sludge worms.

Collaborating with Brinkhurst, Dr. Narinder Kaushik is carrying out "highly refined laboratory experiments" in his laoratory at the University of Guelph.

It will be 18 months before Brinkhurst's laboratory is built. Meanwhile, he is assembling the equipment needed for the day he has his own laboratory again.

British Firms Helped Pound Sterling

LONDON (AP) — Evidence that is beginning to emerge suggests British companies played an important role in the recent run that drove down the value of the pound.

Until now, market sources here have largely blamed the oil-producing countries and other foreigners with large holdings of sterling for driving the pound down to a record low.

These foreign interests are known to have converted hundreds of millions of pounds to other currencies in the last year because they lost confidence in the British economy.

It now appears that some major British companies also lost confidence and joined significantly in the pressure on the pound, particularly from May on.

These firms were acting in their own corporate interests, protecting profits, but th eeffect of their actions was to help drive the pound down further.

One of the firms allegedly involved was the giant state-run British Steel Corp. The Guardian says this nationalized industry helped push down the pound from the end of April.

The timing is particularly significant. At the end of April, the pound was down to $1.80. Denis Healey, chancellor of the exchequer, and other leading government spokesmen said the pound was then undervalued. They said inflation was being curbed and foreign trade improving. They asked foreign sterling holders to have confidence that things were getting better.

Yet, says The Guardian account, it was precisely at that moment that British firms begon to lose faith in the pound and helped to push it down to $1.70.

British firms are unable to play the money markets. But big firms with large overseas dealings can affect the market. By paying their bills early in foreign currency or by converting their foreign-currency income late, they can affect the amount of money crossing the market — the supply and demand which determines the rote of the floating pound. In market terms, these are called leads and lags.

The Guardian says British Steel's financial managers decided at the end of April to change policy. They issued a directive, reproduced in the newspaper, saying the conversion of foreign income into sterling should be delayed.

British Steel sells exports worth $1.2 billion annually.

Conversion of this kind of income into pounds would have helped drive the rate up. Delay would help press it down.

By bringing in the money later at a lower rate, British Steel would earn more pounds. So a delay order would be issued only on the expectation that the pound would fall and that this might be profitable for the company.

"The British Steel Corp. contributed to the recent rapid drop in the value of the pound," The Guardian says.

A British Steel spokesman said in response to the newspaper's account that the company is flexible in its "approach to the present financial situation" and acts "to minimize any adverse affects on the corporation."

Other evidence also suggests that British firms have contributed to the run on the pound, although individual companies are not identified. The signposts are:

—An official report by Britain's major clearing banks said loans to the private sector rose by more than $300 million in the four weeks ending May 19, but that there were few signs of any investment demand. The report said the loans may be "due to changes in the pattern of foreign-exchange paymtnts associated with the weakness of sterling." In other words, companies were delaying conversion of their foreign earnings until the pound went down and covered their sterling needs by borrowing at home.

—Informed financial sources estimate that net capital outflow from Britain was more than $1 billion each in March and April but less than $100 million in May. The March and April figures are consistent with foreigners pulling money out of Britain. The May figure is not, suggesting other reasons were responsible for the pound's drop in May, such as British firms using leads and lags.

—Official figures from the Bank of England's report for the first quarter of 1976 showed that the oil-exporting countries held their investments in Britain steady during the period after reducing them last year.

In short, said the central bank, there was less pressure on sterling from the oil producers in the first quarter than there had been in 1975.

Chopper Business Flying

Changes in government policies on resource development give rise to some optimism in the helicopter operating industry, the annual meeting of Okanagan Helicopters Ltd. was told by John Pitts, chairman and president.

He told shareholders that despite the slowdown in general economic activity in Canada, Okanagan this year should show activity about the same as in 1975.

Recorded revenues of $32,388,000 and profit of $1,488,000 were recorded by Okanagan and its subsidiaries — Canada's largest helicopter company — in the year ended Jan. 31, 1976.

Pitts said that first quarter results this year show a modest increase in revenue compared to a year ago but that there is a decided improvement in operating costs. He gave no figures.

New federal regulations affecting oil exploration in frontier areas and improved mining activity in B.C. are two of the brighter spots.

He said that a federal outline of proposed land regulations in Canadian frontier areas which was tabled in parliament in April more or less define terms under which oil companies will operate.

"Even though the regulations may not be ideal, they do indicate a real concern of the federal government about Canada's diminishing oil reserves.

'We feel guarded optimism that if the present regulations will not get exploration going at an adequate rate, there will be modifications to further encourage exploration."

He said it could result in greatly increased helicopter activity in the Mackenzie area of the Northwest Territories where exploration has been declining in recent years.

There has been a noticeable improvement in the mining activities in B.C., he said.

Oft and again, a leaf blown
by the wind

'Tis never lost; where'er it
fate may blow,

The imprint of its settling's
left behind.

And so with every life,
whate'er its kind,

It shapes itself a place,
'tis destined so,

If hence in peace or turmoil
it should go,

Its influence ever lives,
as 'twas designed.

Crucial Moment For Spacecraft

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The crucial moment approached today for the Viking spacecraft to hit its brakes and swing into orbit around Mars, from where it will scan the surface for possible hazards at its July 4 landing site.

Late Friday night the speeding probe received its orders from earth, leaving it up to a computer on board to guide Viking through the crucial manoeuvre.

Mission Director Tom Young described it as a "one-time opportunity" for the Viking, launched 10 months ago, to achieve orbit. Though considered highly unlikely, a failure at this point might send the robot craft hurtling past the planet into oblivion.

Today's manoeuvre, requiring the craft to complete precise twists and rolls, was to begin with a 40-minute burst from its rocket motor. The braking effect of the firing was to slow the Viking by about 2,454 miles an hour.

The pull of Martian gravity would then curve the craft's path into an orbit. Viking would then circle the planet in 42½ hours with an orbit ranging from 31,440 miles above the planet's surface to within 932 miles of the planet.

Another rocket firing Monday is scheduled to reduce the orbit to 24.6 hours—the length of a Martian day—and powerful cameras are to begin studying the landing area at the mouth of a huge gorge. If it appears too inhospitable, an alternate site will be used.

Project officials said the two-piece spacecraft was in excellent shape and was transmitting back to earth "spectacular" pictures of Mars. The Viking orbiter will whirl around the planet while the landing unit—an automated biological laboratory—detaches itself and descends to the surface.

Photographs taken by the spacecraft as it closed on Mars showed an unexpected haze believed to be clouds of ice crystals. The planet's surface appeared to have more color variations than seen in pictures taken by other spacecraft, and a towering volcanic mountain discovered five years ago seems to have changed in some way, scientists said Friday. They said patterns of light and shadow on the mountain and its contours appear to have changed.

ACCESS LIMITED

BROCKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — School trustees will be limited access to school board records and invoices if the Leeds and Grenville County board of education approves a proposal by the policy committee.

Ronald Boyd, local representative of the Ontario Public School Men Teachers Federation said statements taken out of context about teachers could be damaging.

LEGAL FIGHT OVER BEAVER

FORT FRANCES, Ont. (CP) — This town may soon be embroiled in a legal battle with the Organizing Committee for the 1976 Olympic Games over its beaver symbol, the town's registered trademark since 1971.

The committee has been told it may use the symbol if it pays the town $10,000 and any legal costs the town encounters in the matter.

Sign Language Not Needed By These Deaf Children

OTTAWA (CP) — Joel Lemay is an energetic, bright-eyed child with red cheeks and soft blonde hair. Now almost three, he has been deaf since he contracted meningitis at 11 months.

Joel has been enrolled in the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario for a year's auditory training. The program teaches deaf children how to speak.

Dr. Andree Smith, chief of the hospital's audiology department said: "If children's hearing defects are detected early, they can be trained and integrated into a normal school setting. Properly trained children don't need to learn sign language."

No sign language or lip reading is taught at the hospital.

To be successful, Dr. Smith said, training must usually begin before a child's language processes are developed, within the first two years.

The aim of the program, which began a year ago, is to keep deaf children in their homes with their parents and to keep them in regular schools, said Judy Simser, hearing therapist in the audiology department.

Through the auditory method, "deaf children can talk to the world, not only to people who know sign language."

The children's hospital program is for congenitally deaf children and for those who become deaf before learning to talk. Only children whose deafness is so severe that hearing and speech would be impossible without hearing aids are enrolled.

Joel wears two hearing devices on his chest in a leather harness over his clothing. He may get a Phonic Ear, which is an FM amplification system.

A deaf child trained by the auditory approach and wearing the Phonic Ear unit can be integrated into a normal school setting. The teacher must wear a Phonic Ear system microphone, which enables the child to hear her up to a range of 200 feet.

Joel could not speak when he began his sessions. He now knows more than 20 words. His parents are French-speaking so Mrs. Simser conducts her sessions with him in French.

Dr. Smith said the children are taught to "discriminate sounds through play and conditioning."

Joel was first taught to discriminate between presence and absence of sound. Mrs Simser now works with him on non-verbal sounds.

The program, said Mrs. Simser, teaches the deaf child to "comprehend language, then to imitate, then to say phrases spontaneously."

Weekly sessions with the therapist are only a small part of the training program, Dr. Smith said. 'One hour a week does not work. It is a full-time job for parents at home."

Indian Students Get A Second Chance

VANCOUVER (CP) — A re-evaluation of the native law program at the University of British Columbia could result in conditional passes for Indian students who failed their first year examinations.

Drew Schroeder, a law professor and co-ordinator of the native students' program, said Friday a "serious evaluation" will involve meetings with the students and the law faculty.

Among the subjects to be discussed is a proposal made by the students involved at a meeting with him Thursday that they enter second-year courses on a qualifying basis, with further exams to be written during the term.

Four native students wrote the examinations and all failed, Rosemary Brown (NDP — Vancouver Burrard) complained in the legislature last week.

She asked for an investigation of complaints by the students that, because of differing educational backgrounds, they failed at examination writing, not comprehension.

Law dean A. J. McClean said the faculty would give sympathetic consideration to representations by the students.

Schroeder said the meeting Thursday was an exchange of information on both sides and that continuing evaluation will be made of weaknesses in the program and the request of the students for promotion.

The native law program was instituted at the university last year on recommendation of the native task force of the justice development commission.

Oak Bay Lions Elect Ackerman

Dave Ackerman has been elected president of Oak Bay Lions Club for the 1976-77 term.

He was installed with other officers at a ceremony conducted by past zone chairman Lou Hamelin. The others were past-president Jim Barnes, vice-presidents Jim O'Neill, John Andersen and Jim Ward, secretary Terry L'Ami, treasurer John Currie, Lion tamer Ken Harrison, tail twister Nick Melnechuk and directors Larry Kirkham, Ben Smith, Norman Bamford, Les Bayliss, John Reeves and Arthur Lambrick.

Fall Victim Identified

City police today identified the man who fell or jumped to his death at Royal Jubilee Hospital Friday as Carrol Olson, 60, of 904-B Admirals Rd, in Esquimalt.

An inquest will be held but no date has been set, a police spokesman said.

The hospital said Friday the man fell from a window on the fourth floor of the hospital's south block about 6:30 a.m.

Police said the patient had been the subject of considerable medical treatment during Thursday night and early Friday.

Economic Council Members

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau announced Friday the appointment of two members to the economic council of Canada and the re-appointment of two others.

The new members are Reverend Gerard Dion, Quebec City, past president of the Canadian Industrial Relations Institute and the editor of a quarterly magazine on industrial relations, and Yolande Laviolette, Montreal, a research counsellor of the Quebec Federation of Caisses Populaires Desjardins.

Re-appointed were Raymond Primeau, Montreal, past vice-president and general manager of La Banque Provinciale du Canada, and S. Robert Blair, Calgary, president and chief executive officer of the Alberta Gas Trunk Line Co. Ltd.

Appointments to the 35-member council are for three-year terms.

The council is a Crown corporation that acts as an adviser to government and economic bodies about the longer term developments in the Canadian economy.

RED LIGHTS MARK FATAL

Red lights flash four ways at the inter-section of Richardson and Richmond Road, effective Friday.

The change from a two-way stop on Richmond only was recommended by a coroner's jury after a motorcylcist was killed in collision with a car April 25.

Cars approaching the intersection from all directions are now required to stop before proceeding through.

Museum Opened

ST. IVES, England (CP) — A museum which is a memorial to the sculptor Barbara Hepworth has opened in this southwest England town. It is in the studio and garden where Dame Barbara lived and worked in her later years before her death in a fire there in May, 1975, at the age of 72. The establishment of the museum was her wish.

Franchising The Investor

Now that Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis has tabled a bill restoring the property vote, Victoria city council can throw away a similar resolution it was going to foist on the annual Union of British Columbia Municipalities. Undoubtedly, there will be cheers in every mingy municipal council chamber across this parochial province at the minister's initiative. In fact, the property vote would influence the outcome of few elections, but it does negate the principle of one person, one vote. The British Reform Act of 1832 enshrined the principle of one man, one vote. On the fringes of the rancid empire it is still a matter of debate, it would seem.

Under the old system, sensibly abolished by the former NDP administration, a designated company representative was allowed to vote in the municipality where he resided as well as in the jurisdiction where the firm was loacted. In a few cases this meant some individuals had the opportunity of voting four or five times. The Curtis legislation would restrict a property owner to only one vote in each municipality, no matter how many pieces of property were owned in a specific jurisdiction. It would also restrict a shareholder to one vote for a company on one piece of property. While this corrects flagrant abuses of the old legislation it still negates the principle of representation by population. Nor does it seem to prevent a real estate development company owning various parcels of land from designating various shareholders or partners for each land parcel and telling them how to vote for the firm.

As Curtis said, anyone who paid taxes had a right to express an opinion in the affairs of local government. Yet business already has a much stronger clout in local affairs than an individual voter. In Victoria alone we have a strong chamber of commerce, a downtown businessmen's association and various shopping centre associations, all of which in one way or another lobby for business interests. This doesn't take into account the average city or town council which is almost invariably peopled by businessmen. How much clout does business need to get its point across?

The basic question here is whether or not investment in a municipality should be a condition of franchise? If a businessman lives in the community where he works he automatically has a voice. To give him an extra vote in another municipality simply because he works or employs people at a certain address negates the idea of representation by population. This legislation is anathema to a truly democratic electoral process.

Bigger Waves to Come

Always quick to complain, Victoria's tourist operators were a bit hasty and somewhat off-target in their rush to blame the provincial government this week for a dropoff in their business. Two weeks does not a tourist season make. It seems the entire industry in B.C. is in the doldrums. Traffic through Rogers Pass in the first quarter of 1976 was almost 10 per cent below the same period a year ago. Hotel occupancy in B.C. is down 2.9 per cent — in Vancouver five per cent: Fewer American vehicles crossed into B.C. this year.

The reasons? The American bicentennial celebrations this year undoubtedly will keep more U.S. travellers at home than usual. The rotten spring weather — cold temperatures and cloudy grey days — probably also deterred tourists. Americans, who are probably the largest group of summer visitors Victoria receives, may finally be fed up with our ever-increasing prices. Restaurants and hotels south of the border are considerably cheaper than here. And the three or four per cent discount on the U.S. dollar is no incentive.

But the tourist businessmen's main complaint about the ferries is probably the most important reason, although they do tend to exaggerate. (For example, the Princess Marguerite, which dumps its load right into the laps of several of the complaining attractions, reports a 24 per cent increase in passengers carried so far in June.)

The B.C. Ferries ad campaign should help to turn around the light load figures for the first part of June, but as officials have noted, the increase in fares has produced more resistance than was thought likely. Whether the decline is permanent or only temporary we won't know for the next couple of summers.

Tourism is only the first and most visible economic indicator of the effect of the fare increases on Vancouver Island. Not as easy to spot, but probably more permanent and far-reaching in its consequences is the impact the higher fares will have on the cost of living and the local economy.

Everything the Island imports will be more costly. Everything made here with imported materials will rise in price — and thus will be harder to sell on the mainland. It can only accelerate the movement of Victoria towards a lopsided employment picture.

The sharp drop-off in tourist business shows the dangers of depending upon a single industry. When the province is determinedly shrinking the civil service and other long-time local businesses are either shutting up or moving to the mainland — Bapco Paint, Ste. Michelle Wines and Hickman Tye Hardware are only some recent examples — it shows just how precarious Victoria's economic position is. Like a rock heaved into a pond, the doubled and tripled ferry fares are sure to have an ever-widening ripple effect. Tourism has been hit with the first small undulations on the surface; the waves to come will be more destructive and longer-lasting in their effects.

How to Stop Worrying And Live with the Pump

Sewage is to Victoria as trees are to Vancouver Island.

It laps at our shores, surfaces in school yards and pollutes shellfish. Our only solution to date is to pipe the stuff out to sea in ever-lengthening conduits. Upwards of five million gallons each day gush into the salt chuck, the secret shame of an area that bathes in the accolade of the Garden City.

At this primitive stage of development all our energy is concentrated on how to move the stuff around more efficiently and cheaply.

Which brings us to the proposed McMicking Point sewage pumping station.

The function of this controversial pump would be to gather up Oak Bay sewage, plus some from Saanich and Victoria, all of which is now being discharged at the tideline, and pump it to Clover Point where it would be disgorged a mile or so from shore.

The trouble is that Beach Drive residents are understandably upset about noise, smell and the general ambience of such a building close to their homes. A 133-name petition has been turned over to the Capital Regional Board asking that the pumping station be relocated at least 1,500 feet from any residence — a point along the Victoria Golf Course was suggested.

It seems ironic that Beach Drive residents would prefer the continual discharge of raw sewage almost outside their front doors as opposed to a pumping unit about the size of a house which would sweep it all away to Clover Point.

While the McMicking Point sewage outfall is some distance from residences of those who are protesting the pumping station, homes overlooking Shoal Bay do not have a view of pristine waters. The 1967 Sanitary Sewage Study of the Greater Victoria Area noted that the McMicking Point outfall was "the main source of pollution in adjacent shoreline waters; sewage slick and gross solids readily visible."

Nothing has changed since 1967.

Irony, though, has little in common with the cost of pumping sewage, and that is where the petitioners are doomed. To move the pumping site to the suggested Victoria Golf Course location would cost approximately $1,644,000 according to an engineering study. It would also require an access roadway across the course and a forcemain as well.

Oak Bay mayor Brian Smith, whose municipal political career may hinge on the location of a gurgling sewer pump, feels resident concern is "bang on." But the chief magistrate of Oak Bay points out that relocating the pump almost anywhere else would also mean higher energy costs to pump the stuff a longer distance to Clover Point.

Perhaps the crowning argument is if the site is relocated at inevitable higher costs, Victoria and Saanich, which are paying part of the cost, would pick up their money — not their sewage, it might be said — and go home.

As regional board chairman Jim Campbell says about the McMicking Point site: "It's dictated by a number of irreversible decisions of the past."

For example previous generations didn't deem it offensive to dump raw sewage on the beach. The proposed McMicking Point pumping station could eliminate up to nine raw sewage outlets which are now pouring raw sewage into Oak Bay waters, most of it at low tide line.

Campbell says the pumping station won't be visible from the road. Smith says he feels the visual and noise pollution have been conquered by the regional board.

That leaves smell.

Even now, tripping among the rocks at low tide along the beach is a massive assault on the olfactory nerve. But doughty Oak Bay will send a representative to similar pumping stations in the Seattle area and try to come up with a solution to this potential hazard.

Other than a hefty local assessment on those who want the pump relocated, it appears Beach Drive residents have no choice but to live with the pump in these days of financial restraint.

Still, it is up to three participating municipalities to do away with noise, smell and general ugliness so the resulting structure housing the pump will resemble almost any Oak Bay residence.—G.R.O.

Ready to Fight an Election

OTTAWA — Pierre Elliot Trudeau speaks English so fluently even down to swear-words, and he has been prime minister for so long, that it is easy at times to forget that he is in his heart and in his roots a Quebecker. Quebec is the pole from which Trudeau's emotions begin, and toward which his thoughts return. It defines him, limits him because he never has fully understood English Canada, and energizes him. It is the passion beneath his reason.

Psychology, therefore, and not politics, was the message that the provincial premiers took away from their mid-week private dinner with Trudeau at 24 Sussex Drive. "He was brilliant, tough, icy and passionate at the same time," said one premier later. "It was a tour de force that terrified poor old Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa."

Frank and Brutal

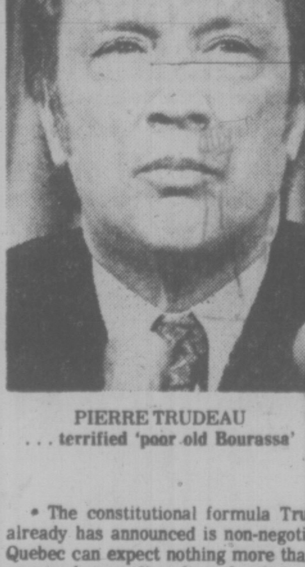
After lamb chops and kiwi fruit washed down with Chateau Figeac 1972, Trudeau assembled his guests in the living room and there, during a session that Bourassa later described as "frank and direct" but which other premiers remembered as "frank and at times brutal," Trudeau sketched out his plans to patriate the constitution.

The essence of Trudeau's intentions:

- He will get the constitution over here no matter what. If the premiers don't like it, and some don't, they can lump it. "I'm cool about it, You guys can do what you want," Trudeau told his guests at one point.

- Trudeau's commitment is personal, and visceral. "I don't intend to go down in history as the prime minister who failed to patriate the constitution," Trudeau said during the closed-door meeting. "If I fail, the constitution won't get patriated for 10 or 20 years. If ever."

- Trudeau is ready, anxious almost, to battle the issue with Bourassa on the hustings in Quebec. "Good luck with your election," he told Bourassa at one point. "The timing is in my hands" — meaning that Trudeau can bring the issue to the political boil too late for Bourassa to exploit it during his 1977 election but in time for use in his own 1978 federal election.



PIERRE TRUDEAU
. . . terrified 'poor old Bourassa'

- The constitutional formula Trudeau already has announced is non-negotiable. Quebec can expect nothing more than the proposed amending formula that would give it and Ontario and combinations of the western and Atlantic provices a veto cover constitutional changes, plus a constitutional guarantee of French language rights. Bourassa brought up his standby demands for jurisdiction over communications, culture and immigration. "Even if we gave these to you, you'd only come back for more," answered Trudeau.

At no time during the session did Trudeau spell out his itinerary for patriating the constitution. He did, though, mention that Queen Elizabeth II would come to Canada in July, 1977, as part of her 25th anniversary celebrations, and most premiers left convinced that this is Trudeau's target date.

As a first step towards that long journey, the premiers will discuss the issue among themselves at their own meeting in Alberta in mid-August. They hope to be able to argue out a common front they then can present to Trudeau at the next first ministers' conference in Ottawa, in October.

In fact, Trudeau already is gaining some allies. "For the first time, there's a general will to bring the constitution back," said Nova Scotia's Gerry Regan.

In private, premiers — excepting Bourassa, admitted they would find it hard to oppose Trudeau. They fear that in a showdown most Canadians, even though few of them care about the constitution, would back Trudeau on the emotional issue of bringing the British North America Act to Canada. They also are worried that if they withhold consent and thus force Trudeau to act unilaterally he would have established a precedent for Ottawa to unilaterally change the constitution itself. "He has us where he wants us," said one premier. "And he knows it."

Shrewd Guess

This is the political calculation in Trudeau's strategy. A battle over the constitution is exactly the kind of issue his bedraggled government needs to restore its electoral prospects.

But don't discount the feelings behind the calculation. Trudeau is deeply worried by the backlash against bilingualism. He is convinced that economic power, and population, will shift irresistably away from Quebec toward the west. Patriation of the constitution therefore becomes Trudeau's chance, perhaps his last chance, to guarantee for Quebec a permanent role within Confederation and thereby to fix it forever into the larger whole. "I am ready to fight an election on this, and to lose it if need be," Trudeau told the premiers during their meeting.

Later, one premier commented: "I think he feels that if he has to lose the next election anyway, he'd be happy to lose it being a martyr for Quebec." Which is a pretty shrewd psychological guess.

In Error

The Sooke Committee for Incorporation respects the right of the press not to divulge its sources of information, but also knows that when a newspaper speaks editorially it must have it's facts straight.

Your editorial of June 16 Rush to Judgment was correct on only one point — there will be a referendum on June 22. That date was requested by the committee and approved by the minister of municipal affairs, and not imposed on us by the minister.

If the Capital Regional Board and three of its members had been making a study on incorporation for Sooke, then the Sooke Committee on Incorporation was not informed of its existance, furthermore the Municipal Act states that incorporation of any area into a municipality is strictly the business of the minister and the residents of the community. The regional board is not involved in any way.

The committee has held four workshops in the past five weeks and an open forum was held on the evening of June 16.

One reason for setting the June 22 date was to hold the referendum while interest was at its peak. If there is anyone in the area who is not well informed then their only excuse can be that they have not been listening.

We consider the entire piece to be editorializing at its worst and can only hope that your readers realize that the formation of a municipality of Sooke is strictly the business of the people of the area and that such matters should never be turned into a political football by an uninformed editorial writer.—Eric Butler, Chairman, Sooke Committee for Incorporation.

(Ed. Note — The Times regrets its error. There is a committee of the Capital Regional Board studying municipal status, but its terms of reference are limited to the Colwood-Langford-Metchosin area and do not include Sooke.)

Why the Rush?

Your editorial, Rush to Judgment, June 16 asks a pertinent question: "Why is Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis in such a rush to hold a vote on whether Sooke residents want to incorporate as a municipality?"

No doubt the Sooke-Jordan River Chamber of Commerce committee for incorporation will say that there have been several "workshops" and that everyone has had time to study the question. However, the boundaries were changed only a few days ago and a map of the new area was available from the department of municipal affairs only on June 10. On that day I picked up the last one available until more were duplicated. Of course, very few people have seen the new map, and no one has explained how the committee has managed to amend their "provisional budget" to fit the new area.

At a public meeting June 16—the first one and this one only being held because people protested that the workshops were not giving accurate information—the only thing that was made clear was that taxes would certainly increase and that the benefits of incorporation at this time were mainly in the minds of the committee and had little resemblance to reality.—Maurice Tozer, Box 820, Sooke.

Tannin Hazard

That good cup of tea and coffee and cocoa and the handsome oaks and other trees and shrubs have something in common — tannin. Research reported by Dr. M. F. Jacobson, graduate of MIT, and researcher at Salk Institute and the Center for Science in the Public Interest, Washington, D.C., shows tannin as a cause of liver cancer in experimental animals.

The tannin content of our city water shows up in its tint and taste. It would increase the average 100-500 milligrams of tannin in every cup of tea, coffee, or cocoa we drink.—G. Wellford, Victoria.

Camping Fees

In March I wrote a letter to Travel Industry Minister Grace McCarthy reminding her that in the Social Credit brochure Get B.C. Moving Again under the heading Senior Citizens, item six reads: "Provide senior citizens free use of provincial parks."

In a reply dated March 26 and signed by a director for the chief of management of the department of recreation and conservation, parks branch, was the following: "On behalf of the minister of recreation and travel industry, we are pleased to reply to your letter relating to the brochure Get B.C. Moving Again and to the concept of reducing camping fees for senior citizens." Hold it right there. The brochure says nothing about reducing fees, it states flatly, free.

The letter continues: "While it is too early to realize positive action in this regard, it is known that the matter of reducing senior citizens' campsite fees in B.C. provincial parks is under active review at this time.

"We certainly are aware of the impact of even a low camping fee on a small fixed income" (then they raise the fee from $2 to $4 in the most popular parks) "in recognition of this fact, we have been encouraging senior citizens to take advantage of the many provincial parks in which camping fees are not charged at all" (Please tell me where, on Vancouver Island, they are—the only free camps I know of are maintained by logging companies. If they are on the mainland and up north somewhere, what about ferry fares and increased gasoline prices?) "and of the off-season free period between September 10 and March 31 in the remaining campgrounds."

Actually they are telling senior citizens to go camping in the fall and winter. The coldest, rainiest and gloomiest time of the year, and when, as the book informs you, that servicing of the camps is not carried out.

So there you have it, senior citizens. What price Socred promises? and what a contrast to Ontario and some of the provinces where a more enlightened policy is in effect.—C. W. Fisher, 308-1023 Esquimalt Road.
